* Discussion among the participants of the National Consensus Meeting revealed the existence of substantial variation in how courts docket events leading to a final dispositive order in a death penalty habeas corpus petition. Some courts reportedly docket only the final order, whereas other courts docket sometimes numerous orders antecedent to the final order. To account for different practices, participants decided to provide a single "total time" estimate for the average time required to handle all events leading to a final judgment order in this case type, which staff would then allocate once to any case with at least one event recorded in any of the following event categories – order on motion for summary judgment, order on substantive or time-intensive motion, or order on any other enumerated motion. The participants agreed on a total time estimate of 6,600 minutes as the average time required to produce a final dispositive order in this case type. The order event and the time estimate is reported in the summary judgment category. The absence of a listed time estimate for order on substantive or time-intensive motion and order on any other enumerated motion reflects the fact that these events received special processing in the data analysis stage of the study.

 The procedure for applying the multi-defendant adjustment was different than the procedure for other adjustments, and is explained in the section of the report titled Development and Application of the Multidefendant Adjustment.
