Service Employees International Union v. Municipality of Mt. Lebanon (Arthur J. Schwab, W.D. Pa. 2:04-cv-1651)

At approximately 1:00 p.m. on the Thursday before the 2004 general election, persons who wanted to go door to door over the weekend to encourage voting and inform residents of their polling places filed an action in the Western District of Pennsylvania's Pittsburgh division claiming that canvassing ordinances in the Allegheny County municipalities of Monroeville and Mt. Lebanon unduly burdened First Amendment canvassing rights.¹ The plaintiffs sought a declaration that the ordinances were unconstitutional, a temporary restraining order, and both preliminary and permanent injunctive relief.²

Because the plaintiffs requested a temporary restraining order, the clerk's office contacted the assigned judge's chambers immediately.³ District Judge Terrence F. McVerry recused himself,⁴ and the case was reassigned to District Judge Arthur J. Schwab.⁵

Between 11:00 and 11:30 that morning, the plaintiffs faxed to the municipalities' lawyers a copy of the complaint.⁶ The attorney for Mt. Lebanon became aware of the fax between 12:00 and 1:00 in the afternoon, about the time that the complaint was filed.⁷ The attorney for Monroeville became aware of the complaint when Channel 11 News called to ask for a comment.⁸ About half an hour after Judge Schwab received the case, he conducted a telephonic proceeding in open court with attorneys for all of the parties.⁹ Judge Schwab obtained from the attorneys an agreement to meet in court at 10:00 on Friday morning with decisionmakers for all parties.¹⁰ He asked the defendants to come with memoranda in response to the plaintiffs' request for immediate relief.¹¹

On Friday morning, Judge Schwab greeted the parties and received oral summaries of the defendants' responses.¹² His principal question for the plaintiffs was whether they wanted a lawsuit or they wanted to canvass.¹³

The complaint alleged that Monroeville required each person going door to door there to obtain a permit, which would take at least two days, and pay a $10 fee, and the complaint alleged that the organization had to pay an additional fee of $50 per week.¹⁴ At the Friday morning proceeding, Monroeville represented that its ordinance did not apply to political canvassers not soliciting contributions.¹⁵ That afternoon, the plaintiffs and Monroeville memorialized the plaintiffs' right to canvass without a permit in a consent decree that Judge Schwab immediately signed.¹⁶ Monroeville was dismissed as a defendant that day.¹⁷

The plaintiffs and Mt. Lebanon spent all Friday working out a consent decree, which Judge Schwab signed that day, allowing the plaintiffs to canvass in Mt. Lebanon over the weekend and deferring the constitutionality of Mt. Lebanon's canvassing ordinance for resolution later.¹⁸ As part of the compromise, instead of individual canvassers appearing at the police station for individual permits, the union would submit a list of canvassers and their drivers' license numbers.¹⁹ Judge Schwab made himself and his staff available over the weekend in case they were needed, and they were not.²⁰

If Judge Schwab received a case like this now, he would refer it to the court's alternative dispute resolution program for immediate mediation by an expert in election law.²¹

On December 2, Judge Schwab determined that Mt. Lebanon's ordinance was constitutional,²² but the court of appeals, on April 28, 2006, determined that it was not.²³ Mt. Lebanon decided not to seek reconsideration of the appellate opinion.²⁴ Judge Schwab ordered mediation on attorney fee matters,²⁵ but by the time the parties worked out the logistics of mediation they apparently came to an agreement on their own.²⁶
