Acknowledgments

Many individuals contributed to this directory and made possible its publication. A number of Federal Judicial Center staff worked on the project. Amy Murrell collected and reviewed entries from the PRISM service of the On-line Computer Library Center (OCLC). Rozzie Bell located and obtained many of the annual National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections (NUCMC) volumes, which greatly expedited the project. David Marshall and Martha Kendall provided editorial assistance. Courtney Caudill, Ida Jones, Pablo Jusem, Tom Klitus, Adam Land, Steven Saltzgiver, and Emily van Tassel collected and reviewed many of the manuscript entries. Cynthia Harrison, former chief historian of the Federal Judicial History Office, initiated the project. Bruce Ragsdale, the current chief, oversaw the preparation of the final manuscript and offered constructive criticism and invaluable advice.

The success of the Federal Judicial Center's surveys of court historical societies and repositories depended on the many court personnel and curators who responded to them. The Center would like to thank those individuals for their contributions. Thanks are also extended to a number of archivists with the National Archives and Records Administration who provided detailed descriptions of judges' personal papers. Staff of the NUCMC, the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN), and the OCLC's PRISM service offered advice concerning their catalogs as well.

Finally, the compiler would like to recognize several individuals who offered assistance at various points in the project. David Wigdor, assistant chief of the Manuscript Division of the Library of Congress, answered questions and offered assistance on how best to review the library's manuscripts. David de Lorenzo, former curator of manuscripts and archives at Harvard University School of Law, answered many questions concerning collections held by that repository. Marsha Trimble, curator of special collections at the University of Virginia School of Law, assisted with the law school's collections. Mike Widener, archivist and rare book librarian at the Tarlton Law Library, answered a number of questions concerning that institution's collections. Karen Dawley Paul, archivist of the U.S. Senate, offered helpful advice regarding the compilation of a directory of manuscript collections. As with any project of this nature, the final determination of what to include and what to exclude rests with the compiler.

Introduction

This directory provides students of federal judicial history with the locations of and descriptions of the contents of manuscript collections related to federal judges, including Supreme Court justices and judges of the U.S. courts of appeals, U.S. circuit courts, U.S. district courts, territorial courts, and various special courts. The materials described in this publication are located in libraries and other institutions open to the public. Within the collections are documents judges have compiled in the course of their judicial careers, correspondence and records related to judges' professional and private lives, and records of judges included in the manuscript collections of other individuals and institutions.

To help launch a history program in 1989, the Federal Judicial Center established an advisory board of federal judges, court administrators, historians, political scientists, legal scholars, and librarians. The board recommended that the Center compile a guide to the diverse and scattered manuscript sources available for studying the men and women who have served on the federal bench. The board members recognized that the lack of such a guide discouraged students and scholars from consulting judges' papers located in repositories throughout the country. Researchers seeking to recount the history of a particular court, write the biography of a judge, or examine the course of a particular case confronted the daunting task of consulting dozens of unrelated guides. Many broader studies of U.S. history omitted reference to federal judges and the courts, owing to the difficulty of identifying relevant primary sources.

By providing a comprehensive list of manuscript collections related to federal judges, this publication facilitates access to an extensive range of records that will enrich historical studies of the federal court system. A judge's papers broaden the perspective of judicial history, detailing the judge's experience with the deliberative process and chronicling his or her path to service on the federal bench. The historical sources listed in this publication provide a valuable supplement to official court records and thus promote a better understanding of the federal judiciary and the careers of the federal judges who have served since 1789.

Compilation of the Directory

The directory presents citations for approximately 5,000 manuscript collections located in 385 repositories. Represented in these entries are more than 900 judges, out of a total of nearly 3,500 who have served the federal judiciary. The staff of the Federal Judicial History Office gathered the majority of citations from a search of the principal national catalogs of manuscript collections: the National Union Catalog of Manuscript Collections (NUCMC); the Research Libraries Information Network (RLIN); and the PRISM service of the On-line Computer Library Center (OCLC). The history office drew references to manuscript collections from the master index of the NUCMC, covering 1956 to 1986, and confirmed these references in the corresponding annual volumes. Name searches were conducted in the archival and manuscripts file of the RLIN database and in the author, title, note, and subject fields of the OCLC system.

Surveys of repositories and federal court historical programs supplemented the searches in NUCMC, RLIN, and OCLC. The history office conducted an initial survey of 254 repositories, requesting descriptions of collections that contained materials related to federal judges. A later survey offered repositories the opportunity to update and verify their entries in the directory. Periodic surveys of court historical programs yielded information on recently donated collections not yet reported to the national catalogs.

Searches of numerous on-line repository catalogs revealed additional collections and provided updates for the descriptions of others. Various published manuscript guides, including Guide to Research Collections of Former United States Senators, 1789-1995; A Guide to Research Collections of Former Members of the United States House of Representatives, 1789-1987; and The Personal Papers of Supreme Court Justices: A Descriptive Guide, also provided judicial collections.¹ An announcement of the project on the Archives listserve resulted in the reporting of several collections of judges' papers not listed in the national catalogs. Finally, many archivists and librarians contributed information concerning new collections, revisions of older collections, and suggestions on possible locations of other sources of judicial materials. The directory presents entries compiled prior to September 1997.

Content of Entries

The directory includes citations for manuscript collections that provide an overview of a judge's life and career, as well as those that focus exclusively on the judge's judicial service. Most decisions about inclusion were based on the descriptions provided by archivists and others reporting the collections to the various catalogs that were consulted. Collection titles, physical descriptions, and content descriptions are generally those the repository provided. With few exceptions, collections were included if the descriptions indicated that they contained papers of a federal judge, that a federal judge was represented in a significant way, or that a federal judge was listed as a correspondent.

The directory does not include autograph collections, scholars' collections that duplicate materials found elsewhere, and most collections composed of only a few documents. Exceptions were made for small collections that related to the federal court service of a judge for whom few other records survived. Records from the National Archives were not included except in the rare instances in which a judge's personal papers were accessioned. Oral histories on deposit at manuscript repositories are described in another publication of the Federal Judicial Center, A Directory of Oral History Interviews Related to the Federal Courts.²

Although the directory includes a range of collections for most judges, entries are more selective for certain well-known individuals who had extensive careers outside the judiciary. For prominent officeholders such as John Jay, Salmon P. Chase, and William Howard Taft, the directory includes only collections for which the range of dates overlapped with their service on the federal courts or collections that provide a comprehensive view of their lives and careers. For living judges, the directory includes collections that the judges have compiled and donated to repositories.

Using the Directory

Entries in the directory are arranged alphabetically by the last name of the judge. The heading contains the judge's full name, dates of birth and death, court or courts, and years of service. Within each judge's entry, descriptions of individual collections are arranged alphabetically by repository and then by title of the collection, with the following exceptions. State historical societies and city and state colleges and universities are arranged alphabetically by city or state. Repository titles that contain personal names are arranged alphabetically by surname.

The collection title is followed by a physical description of the collection, indications of finding aids and restrictions, a description of the materials relevant to the judge, and the location of microfilm copies of the collection, if applicable. The term "finding aid" incorporates all of the various guides maintained by archival facilities, including published guides, inventories, card files, catalogs, and item lists. The directory indicates if a collection is restricted, but it does not provide specific rules of access, which are subject to revision. Researchers should contact the repository to determine the current access policy for restricted collections.

A judge's personal papers, if available, are listed first within each judge's entry. Papers that were compiled by or organized around another individual or institution and that contain correspondence or other records of a judge are listed second. Thus, a repository may be listed twice within a judge's entry, once for personal collections and again for collections of other individuals or institutions. Personal collections typically include case files, memoranda, materials concerning the administration of the judge's chambers, draft and final opinions, speeches, correspondence, and reports. Older collections that a repository has labeled "family papers" are listed with these personal collections. The titles of personal collections are italicized, and their descriptions are more detailed than the descriptions of collections of other individuals, which identify only the materials related to the judge, such as correspondence.

Appendix A lists each federal court represented in the directory. Under the heading of each court, and in chronological order by dates of service, are the names of judges for whom the directory includes an entry. The service dates are the year of the judge's commission and the year of final termination of service, including the year of senior status. For Supreme Court justices, the termination date indicates the year of retirement from the Court, although many justices continued with judicial responsibilities. Appendix B lists all the repositories represented in the directory, along with their addresses, telephone numbers, and URL and e-mail addresses, if available.

The Federal Judicial History Office will provide regular electronic updates of this directory. Individuals are encouraged to notify the history office of newly accessioned collections and collections not identified in this publication. A manuscripts register for this purpose is provided in Appendix C.

Other Sources of Information on Federal Judges

The chambers papers and other records of a federal judge are the personal property of the judge who created them, and these papers have never been the subject of a systematic policy of collection and preservation as have been the official records of the federal courts. For many judges, including some jurists with long and notable careers in public service, no manuscript collections have survived to document their lives. For other judges, isolated collections may have eluded the search process. In compiling the directory, the history office relied on information provided by the repositories reporting to the various published and on-line sources consulted. Judges may be represented in additional collections not listed in the directory. Researchers can look for other materials related to a federal judge in official government records and among the papers of judicial colleagues and individuals or institutions that played a significant role in the judge's career.

The National Archives holds the official records of the federal courts and those of various executive branch departments that include material related to the administration of the courts. The official records of the courts contain official correspondence, case files, and administrative records for the U.S. Supreme Court and the other federal courts. The records of the Department of State contain materials related to the appointment and service of judges from 1789 to 1888, and the records of the Department of Justice include materials related to judicial appointments. Records of the Departments of the Treasury, the Interior, and Justice from the years when those agencies were successively responsible for the fiscal administration of the federal courts contain financial accounts and other documents related to the service of particular judges. A detailed description of these records is provided on the NARA World Wide Web site at <<http://www.nara.gov:80/>> or in the Guide to Federal Records in the National Archives.³

The official records of the legislative branch and the papers of individual senators and representatives are another important source of information on federal judges. Researchers should consult the guides to the research collections of former members of the Senate and House of Representatives for the papers of individuals who served on judiciary committees or were otherwise involved in the appointment of a judge. The records of congressional committees will be useful for research on the confirmation process or other congressional business related to judges. Information concerning congressional committee records is presented on the NARA Web site, as well as in Guide to the Records of the United States House of Representatives at the National Archives, 1789-1989 and Guide to the Records of the United States Senate at the National Archives, 1789-1989.⁴

The extensive collections of a presidential library frequently contain materials related to judges appointed by the President. Descriptions of these collections are available in *A Guide to Manuscripts in the Presidential Libraries*⁵ and on the NARA Web site. Published documentary editions, which are based on exhaussive searches of many repositories, also may provide important leads to the location of additional judicial papers. A complete list of documentary editing projects is available on the Web site of the Association for Documentary Editing at <<http://etext.virginia.edu/ade/>>.

Judges who are interested in donating a collection of papers and manuscript curators who are interested in learning more about accessioning judicial papers can consult A Guide to the Preservation of Federal Judges' Papers.⁶ This publication is available from the Federal Judicial Center.

About the Federal Judicial Center

The Federal Judicial Center is the research, education, and planning agency of the federal judicial system. It was established by Congress in 1967 (28 U.S.C. §§ 620–629), on the recommendation of the Judicial Conference of the United States.

By statute, the Chief Justice of the United States chairs the Center's Board, which also includes the director of the Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts and seven judges elected by the Judicial Conference.

The Court Education Division develops and administers education and training programs and services for nonjudicial court personnel, such as those in clerks' offices and probation and pretrial services offices, and management training programs for court teams of judges and managers.

The Judicial Education Division develops and administers education programs and services for judges, career court attorneys, and federal defender office personnel. These include orientation seminars, continuing education programs, and special focus workshops.

The Publications & Media Division develops and produces educational audio and video programs and edits and coordinates the production of all Center publications, including research reports and studies, educational and training publications, reference manuals, and periodicals. The Center's Information Services Office, which maintains a specialized collection of materials on judicial administration, is located within this division.

The Research Division undertakes empirical and exploratory research on federal judicial processes, court management, and sentencing and its consequences, often at the request of the Judicial Conference and its committees, the courts themselves, or other groups in the federal system.

The Center's Federal Judicial History Office develops programs relating to the history of the judicial branch and assists courts with their own judicial history programs.

The Interjudicial Affairs Office serves as clearinghouse for the Center's work with state–federal judicial councils and coordinates programs for foreign judiciaries, including the Foreign Judicial Fellows Program.

The Systems Innovation & Development Office provides technical support for Center education and research and for the Center's own administration.
