Preface

In 1987, the Center published a monograph on the Bail Reform Act of 1984 providing a summary of appellate case law involving the act from October 12, 1984, its effective date, to January 13, 1987. The monograph was undertaken because the statute was clearly fertile ground for litigation and controversy. Because that has continued to be true, the Center determined that an updated monograph would be useful to federal judicial officers.

The original monograph was written by Deirdre Golash. This updated edition was prepared by Alan Hirsch and Diane Sheehey of the Center's Publications and Media Division. It addresses case law as of April 15, 1993. Appendix A reproduces the Bail Reform Act of 1984, as amended, as of that date.

The Bail Reform Act of 1984 authorizes and sets forth the procedures for a judicial officer¹ to order the release or detention of an arrested person pending trial, sentence, and appeal.²

I. Pretrial Release

A. Release on Personal Recognizance

Under section 3142(b), the defendant must be released on personal recognizance or unsecured personal bond unless the judicial officer determines “that such release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community.” Release is always subject to the condition “that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release.”³

B. Conditional Release

Under section 3142(c), if the judicial officer determines that release of a defendant on personal recognizance or unsecured bond presents a risk of the defendant’s nonappearance or danger to any person or to the community, the judicial officer may impose additional conditions of release. The judicial officer must choose “the least restrictive . . . condition, or combination of conditions, that . . . will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community.”⁴

1. Unless otherwise noted in a specific provision of the Act, a “judicial officer” may be a state or federal judge or justice, a magistrate judge, a justice of the peace, or a city mayor. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3156(a), 3041.

2. 18 U.S.C. §§ 3141–3150. The statute has been amended several times. References in this monograph to the “Bail Reform Act” or the “Act” are to the amended version in effect as of April 15, 1993.

3. 18 U.S.C. § 3142 (b), (c)(1)(A).

4. 18 U.S.C. § 3142 (c)(1)(B).

The statute lists many possible conditions of release; it also empowers courts to impose “any other condition that is reasonably necessary” to assure appearance and protect the community.⁵ Release conditions must be relevant to the purposes of assuring appearance and safety.⁶ Various conditions that courts have imposed under the catchall provision of the statute include drug testing, house arrest, submission to warrantless searches for drugs or alcohol, telephone monitoring, residence in a halfway house, electronic bracelet monitoring, and submission to random, unannounced visits by pretrial services officers.

Several courts have stated that conditions of release vary with the circumstances of each case and should be based on an individual evaluation of the defendant; the treatment of other defendants is generally not relevant.⁷

Section 3142(c)(2) precludes a judicial officer from “impos[ing] a financial condition that results in the pretrial detention of the person.” This provision does not require bail to be set at a figure that

6. United States v. Brown, 870 F.2d 1354, 1358 n.5 (7th Cir. 1989) (it was error to require defendant either to accept court-appointed counsel or to remain in forum district; although it might be permissible to require retention of counsel as a condition of release if necessary to assure safety of the community or appearance at trial, the magistrate judge did it “in order to ensure a fair and orderly trial. Although laudable in spirit, such concerns do not have . . . roots in the Bail Reform Act.”); United States v. Rose, 791 F.2d 1477, 1480 (11th Cir. 1986) (condition that bail bond be retained by the clerk to pay any fine imposed on defendant was irrelevant to purpose of assuring appearance and thus violated Eighth Amendment prohibition on excessive bail); United States v. Frazier, 772 F.2d 1451, 1452–53 (9th Cir. 1985) (per curiam) (condition that property securing bond be unencumbered held improper because it was geared more toward protecting government’s property interest than assuring defendant’s appearance).

7. See United States v. Patriarca, 948 F.2d 789, 794 (1st Cir. 1991) (noting “error of lumping defendants together” and rejecting government’s argument that because defendant is a member of the same organized crime family as another detainee he should be “painted with the same brush and merit[s] the same treatment”); United States v. Tortora, 922 F.2d 880, 888 (1st Cir. 1990) (rejecting defendant’s contention that he should be treated the same as his confederates: “Detention determinations . . . must be based on the evidence which is before the court regarding the particular defendant. . . . The inquiry is factbound. No two defendants are likely to have the same pedigree or to occupy the same position.”); United States v. Spilotro, 786 F.2d 808, 816 (8th Cir. 1986) (applying same condition of release to all defendants in district was abuse of discretion).

the defendant can readily post: “a court must be able to induce a defendant to go to great lengths to raise the funds without violating the condition in section 3142(c).”⁸ Even if the defendant cannot afford the bail amount, the condition may not run afoul of the statute.⁹ Courts have held that section 3142(c)(2) prevents only the “sub rosa use of money bond’ to detain defendants whom the court considers dangerous.”¹⁰ Thus, although a court cannot intentionally detain the defendant by setting bail at an unaffordable level, it may set bail at whatever level it finds reasonably necessary to secure appearance; if the defendant cannot afford that amount, the defendant is detained not because he or she “cannot raise the money, but because without the money the risk of flight is too great.”¹¹ However, courts of appeals have held that if the defendant informs the trial court that he or she cannot make bail, the trial court “must explain its reasons for determining that the particular requirement is an indispensable component of the conditions for release.”¹²

If the defendant does post bail, but there are grounds to suspect that the source of funds offered is illegitimate, the court may hold a hearing to inquire into the matter.¹³

Cf. United States v. Szott, 768 F.2d 159, 160 (7th Cir. 1985) (per curiam) (defendant’s bare assertion that he could not post $1 million bail did not rebut government’s assertion that the defendant may be able to raise the money).

13. See, e.g., United States v. O’Brien, 895 F.2d 810, 817 (1st Cir. 1990) (district court erred in finding that “it was precluded from conducting a hearing once the set condition had been met”); United States v. Nebbia, 357 F.2d 303, 304 (2d Cir. 1966) (seminal case suggesting a hearing).

C. Written Findings

Federal Rule of Appellate Procedure 9(a) requires that a written statement of reasons accompany a release order.¹⁴ In several circuits, a failure to comply with this requirement in contested cases results in a remand.¹⁵ Section 3142(h)(1) specifies that a release order must set forth the conditions of release in a “clear and specific” manner.

The statement of reasons should not be perfunctory. For example, where a district court stated that listed conditions of release “will reasonably assure the safety of the community,” the First Circuit remanded because this “conclusory language accomplished very little in the way of finding subsidiary facts or furnishing needed enlightenment to an appellate tribunal. The judge gave no explanation of why he believed the proposed conditions would prove adequate.”¹⁶

D. Advising Defendant of Penalty

At the time of the defendant’s release, the judicial officer must also advise the person of the penalty and consequences of violating a term of release.¹⁷ The Fifth Circuit held that it is not sufficient to inform the defendant that a violation of release conditions will result in arrest; the judicial officer must advise the defendant of the penalty for the violation: a term of imprisonment under section 3147.¹⁸

E. Revocation and Modification of Release

I. Revocation for Violation of Release Conditions

If a condition of release is violated, the government may move for a revocation of the release order.¹⁹ After a hearing, a court may revoke release if it finds

- (1) . . .
 - (A) probable cause to believe that the person has committed a . . . crime while on release; or
 - (B) clear and convincing evidence that the person has violated any other condition of release; and
- (2) . . .
 - (A) based on the factors set forth in section 3142(g) of this title, there is no condition or combination of conditions of release that will assure that the person will not flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community; or
 - (B) the person is unlikely to abide by any condition or combination of conditions of release.²⁰

A finding of probable cause²¹ that the person committed a felony while on release gives rise to a rebuttable presumption that no release conditions can assure the safety of others.²² Release will be revoked unless the defendant comes forward with evidence to overcome the presumption.²³

If the judicial officer finds that some condition or conditions of release will assure the defendant's appearance and the community's safety, he or she may amend the conditions in accordance with sec -

19. 18 U.S.C. § 3148(b).

20. Id.

21. "Probable cause" under section 3148(b)(1)(A) means "that the facts available to the judicial officer warrant a man of reasonable caution in the belief that the defendant has committed a crime while on bail." United States v. Gotti, 794 F.2d 773, 777 (2d Cir. 1986). Accord United States v. Aron, 904 F.2d 221, 224 (5th Cir. 1990); United States v. Cook, 880 F.2d 1158, 1160 (10th Cir. 1989).

22. 18 U.S.C. § 3148(b).

23. See United States v. Cook, 880 F.2d 1158, 1160 (10th Cir. 1989) (reversing decision not to revoke where district court found the rebuttable presumption of dangerousness established and defendant offered no evidence to rebut it).

tion 3142. Where the revocation hearing is precipitated by the defendant's arrest on a new charge, and the new charge is itself grounds for a detention hearing, the revocation hearing is separate from the detention hearing on the new charge.²⁴

The Second and Fifth Circuits held that section 3148(b)(2) findings must be supported by a preponderance of the evidence.²⁵

The Act does not address the nature of a section 3148 hearing or whether specific findings must be made. However, the Second Circuit has held that a section 3148 hearing and a section 3142 hearing offer the same protections.²⁶ The section 3142 protections are discussed in Part II.

2. Modification or Revocation Where Defendant Has Not Violated Release Conditions

Under section 3142(c)(3), a judicial officer "may at any time amend the order to impose additional or different conditions of release." This provision recognizes "the possibility that a changed situation or new information" may come to the attention of the court.²⁷

26. United States v. Davis, 845 F.2d 412, 414 (2d Cir. 1988) (remanding a detention order where defendant had not been permitted to testify and present evidence and the trial court had not made explicit findings or given its reasons for revocation and detention).

II. Pretrial Detention

A. Statutory Grounds

The judicial officer must order the defendant detained if no condition will reasonably assure the appearance of the defendant and the safety of the community.²⁸ Thus, it appears that a showing of either the defendant's likelihood to flee or dangerousness to others requires detention. Most courts have operated on this assumption, and a number have made it explicit.²⁹ The Second Circuit interprets the provision differently.³⁰

The court must consider all reasonable less restrictive alternatives to detention.³¹ The First Circuit cautions that the Act "does not require release of a dangerous defendant if the only combination of conditions that would reasonably assure societal safety consists of heroic measures beyond those which can fairly be said to have been within Congress's contemplation."³² At the same time, courts have recognized that "[p]retrial detention is still an exceptional step."³³

28. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(e).

29. United States v. King, 849 F.2d 485, 488 (11th Cir. 1988); United States v. Ramirez, 843 F.2d 256, 257 (7th Cir. 1988); United States v. Sazenski, 806 F.2d 846, 848 (8th Cir. 1986) (per curiam); United States v. Fortna, 769 F.2d 243, 249 (5th Cir. 1985).

30. United States v. Friedman, 837 F.2d 48, 49 (2d Cir. 1988) (interpreting the Act not to permit detention on the basis of dangerousness in the absence of risk of flight, obstruction of justice, or an indictment for the offenses specifically enumerated in section 3142(f)(1): crimes of violence, offenses for which the maximum sentence is life imprisonment or death, and certain drug-related offenses carrying a maximum term of ten years or more).

31. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(e). See United States v. Song, 934 F.2d 103, 105 (7th Cir. 1991) (remanding because defendants proposed electronic surveillance anklets rather than detention, and trial court failed to consider whether it was a reasonable alternative).

32. United States v. Tortora, 922 F.2d 880, 887 (1st Cir. 1990) (rejecting claim that house arrest with twenty-four-hour surveillance was in order).

33. United States v. Torres, 929 F.2d 291, 292 (7th Cir. 1991), citing United States v. Salerno, 481 U.S. 739, 749 (1987). Accord United States v. Townsend, 897 F.2d 989, 994 (9th Cir. 1990) ("Only in rare cases should release be denied.").

And the Eighth Circuit has noted that “reasonably assure” does not mean “guarantee.”³⁴

B. Constitutionality

Even before the Bail Reform Act of 1984 was enacted, the Supreme Court had upheld the constitutionality of detention based on likelihood of flight.³⁵ In United States v. Salerno,³⁶ the Court upheld the Act itself against the claim that detention based on the defendant’s dangerousness violates due process. The Court, however, “intimate[d] no view as to the point at which detention in a particular case might become excessively prolonged”³⁷ and thus constitute a violation of due process. Appellate courts since Salerno have held that due process challenges to pretrial detention must be decided on a case-by-case basis. The relevant cases are discussed in Part III.

C. Factors To Be Considered

Section 3142(g) sets forth the factors for the judicial officer to consider in determining whether to release the defendant. These factors must be considered whenever release is sought, whether under section 3142 (pending trial), section 3143 (pending appeal or sentence), section 3144 (material witness), or section 3148(b) (violation of release condition).³⁸ The factors are

- (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, including whether the offense is a crime of violence or involves a narcotic drug;
- (2) the weight of the evidence against the person;
- (3) the history and characteristics of the person, including—

35. Bell v. Wolfish, 441 U.S. 520, 533–34 (1979).

36. 481 U.S. 739 (1987).

37. Id. at 747 n. 4. The Court also rejected the claim that the Act violates the prohibition against excessive bail.

38. See S. Rep. No. 225, 98th Cong., 1st Sess. 23 (1983), reprinted in 1984 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3182, 3206.

- (A) the person's character, physical and mental condition, family ties, employment, financial resources, length of residence in the community, community ties, past conduct, history relating to drug or alcohol abuse, criminal history, and record concerning appearance at court proceedings; and
 - (B) whether, at the time of the current offense or arrest, the person was on probation, on parole, or on other release pending trial, sentencing, appeal, or completion of sentence for an offense under Federal, State, or local law; and
- (4) the nature and seriousness of the danger to any person or the community that would be posed by the person's release.³⁹

The Seventh Circuit has warned that the trial court may not disregard any of these factors.⁴⁰ The Ninth Circuit has said that, of the four factors, the weight of the evidence against the defendant is least important.⁴¹

Several courts have held that the probable length of pretrial detention is not a proper consideration in the judicial officer's determination of whether to release the defendant, because it has no bearing on the two concerns addressed by the Act: likelihood to flee and dangerousness.⁴² The Second Circuit found error where the

40. United States v. Torres, 929 F.2d 291, 291-92 (7th Cir. 1991) (district court explicitly discounted defendant's "family ties," a factor listed in section 3142(g)(3)(A) as relevant to likelihood of flight, on the ground that defendant's love for his family "does not increase the likelihood of his appearance because prison, his alternative to flight, also would sever those bonds." The appellate court criticized the trial court for "read[ing family ties] out of the statute. . . . If, as the statute provides, family ties are relevant to the probability of flight, a judge may not rebuff all evidence about the subject." The appellate court noted that, in any event, "[e]ven an imprisoned person can see his family more frequently than does one on the lam").

However, where detention has in fact been prolonged, reconsideration of the detention order may be required. See infra Part III(B).

district court relied primarily on the demeanor of the defendant, since demeanor is not one of the factors listed in the statute.⁴³ The First Circuit held that the court may consider prior arrests as part of criminal history even though the defendant was not convicted on the charges.⁴⁴ The D.C. and Third Circuits stated that findings should be based on evidence presented at the detention hearing, not on extraneous information.⁴⁵

D. Standard of Proof

The statute specifies that a finding that no conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person or the community must be supported by clear and convincing evidence.⁴⁶ It fails to specify the standard of proof for a finding that no conditions will reasonably assure the defendant's appearance. The courts have held that such a finding must be supported only by a preponderance of the evidence.⁴⁷

43. United States v. Shakur, 817 F.2d 189, 200 (2d Cir.) (“[An] assessment of demeanor often may be a helpful aid to the court. . . . [H]owever, where the factors enunciated by Congress compel the conclusion that the defendant should be detained, the court may not second guess Congress by relying almost exclusively on an extrastatutory inquiry.”), cert. denied, 484 U.S. 840 (1987).

44. United States v. Acevedo-Ramos, 755 F.2d 203, 209 (1st Cir. 1985).

45. United States v. Vortis, 785 F.2d 327, 329 (D.C. Cir.) (per curiam) (determination of likely flight should not be based on previous pretrial proceedings), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 841 (1986); United States v. Accetturo, 783 F.2d 382, 392 (3d Cir. 1986) (determination should not be based on evidence produced at codefendant's hearing).

46. 18 U.S.C. § 3142 (f).

47. United States v. Patriarca, 948 F.2d 789, 793 (1st Cir. 1991); United States v. Aitken, 898 F.2d 104, 107 (9th Cir. 1990); United States v. King, 849 F.2d 485, 489 (11th Cir. 1988); United States v. McConnell, 842 F.2d 105, 110 (5th Cir. 1988) (en banc); United States v. Jackson, 823 F.2d 4, 5 (2d Cir. 1987); United States v. Vortis, 785 F.2d 327, 328–29 (D.C. Cir.) (per curiam), cert. denied, 479 U.S. 841 (1986); United States v. Portes, 786 F.2d 758, 765 (7th Cir. 1985); United States v. Orta, 760 F.2d 887, 891 n.20 (8th Cir. 1985). The courts have reasoned that, in light of Congress's specification that a finding of dangerousness requires a high level of proof, its silence regarding risk of flight suggests that it did not intend to require a high level of proof for risk of flight.

E. Definition of Dangerousness

Defendants may be detained because of the risk of danger to the community even where there is no showing that they are likely to engage in physical violence. The legislative history of the statute indicates that Congress regards drug trafficking as a danger to the community.⁴⁸ The Ninth Circuit recognizes economic danger to the community as requiring detention.⁴⁹

The Third Circuit interprets the statute as authorizing pretrial detention based on danger to the community only upon a finding that the defendant is likely to commit one of the offenses specified in section 3142(f).⁵⁰ The Second Circuit appears to agree,⁵¹ although it seems to reject the contention that evidence of dangerousness must involve the likelihood of conduct related to the offense the defendant is charged with.⁵²

The court cited for support United States v. Quartermaine, 913 F.2d 910, 917 (11th Cir. 1990), where defendant was charged with drug possession, yet the Eleventh Circuit considered his unrelated acts of domestic violence evidence of dangerousness (albeit without discussing the fact that the acts were unrelated to the charged crime).

F. Detention Hearing

I. Statutory Requirements

Section 3142(f)(1) provides that a detention hearing shall be held on the government's motion⁵³ in a case involving (1) a crime of violence; (2) an offense carrying a penalty of life imprisonment or death; (3) a federal drug offense carrying a penalty of ten years or more; or (4) any felony following convictions for two or more of the above three offenses, two or more comparable state or local offenses, or a combination of such offenses. The court may hold a hearing on its own motion or the government's motion in a case that involves serious risk of flight or serious risk that the person will attempt to obstruct justice.⁵⁴

Although some courts have detained defendants in circumstances other than those listed in section 3142(f), the First, Third, and Fifth Circuits, the only circuits to address the question directly, held that defendants may not be detained unless they fit into one of the four categories described above.⁵⁵ However, the Fifth Circuit made clear

53. The motion need not be in writing. United States v. Volksen, 766 F.2d 190, 192 (5th Cir. 1985).

54. 18 U.S.C. § 3142(f)(2).

55. United States v. Byrd, 969 F.2d 106, 110 (5th Cir. 1992) (detention order vacated because government did not establish that to knowingly receive child pornography through the mail was covered by section 3142(f)); United States v. Ploof, 851 F.2d 7, 11 (1st Cir. 1988) (evidence of defendant's plans to kill someone did not justify detention when charged offenses involved white-collar crimes not covered by section 3142(f); case remanded to see if the person whom defendant allegedly intended to harm was a witness, in which case detention would be proper pursuant to section 3142(f)(2)(B)'s obstruction of justice provision); United States v. Himler, 797 F.2d 156, 160 (3d Cir. 1986) (defendant charged with false identification could not be detained absent proof of risk of flight). As noted (see supra note 52 and accompanying text) United States v. Rodriguez, 950 F.2d 85, 88 (2d Cir. 1991), and United States v. Quartermaine, 913 F.2d 910, 917 (11th Cir. 1990), suggest that there need not be a nexus between the charged offense and the evidence of dangerousness. This is not inconsistent with the First, Third, and Fifth Circuits' holdings that defendants may be detained only if one of the circumstances listed in section 3142(f) is present. In Rodriguez and Quartermaine, defendants were charged with offenses listed in section 3142(f). Thus, the two lines of cases may be reconciled as follows: a detention hearing is authorized only if it involves one of the circumstances listed in section 3142(f), but when such a circumstance is present, dangers posed by the defendant unrelated to that circumstance that section 3142(f) applies if the case against the defendant “involves” a crime of violence, that is, if the offense with which the defendant was charged is “reasonably connected” to acts of violence, even if the offense is not itself a crime of violence.⁵⁶

A “crime of violence” is

- (A) an offense that has as an element of the offense the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another; or
- (B) any other offense that is a felony and that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.⁵⁷

The Second Circuit has held that conspiracy to commit armed robbery is a crime of violence under this section.⁵⁸

A few district courts have said that an offense not considered a crime of violence within the sentencing provisions of 18 U.S.C. § 924 may still be a crime of violence for the purposes of the Bail Reform Act.⁵⁹ However, the Second Circuit stated that the two definitions of crime of violence are “virtually identical.”⁶⁰ may be considered by the judicial officer pursuant to section 3142(g)(4), which permits consideration generally of danger to any person or the community.

56. United States v. Byrd, 969 F.2d 106, 110 (5th Cir. 1992). The government adduced evidence that defendant, charged with knowingly receiving child pornography through the mail, was a danger to the community because he was a child molester. The Fifth Circuit held, however, that because the government did not establish that the charged crime “involve[d]” an act of violence, defendant could not be detained.

Johnson*, 704 F. Supp. 1398, 1402–03 (E.D. Mich. 1988) (being a felon in possession of a firearm is a crime of violence under the Bail Reform Act, although not under the Sentencing Guidelines).

2. Timing of Detention Motion and Hearing

a. statutory requirement; remedy for a violation

A detention hearing must be held immediately upon the defendant's first appearance before a judicial officer unless the defendant or the government seeks a continuance.⁶¹ Generally, "first appearance" means just that.⁶² However, the Eighth Circuit suggested that this requirement is not violated when a detention hearing is held upon discovery of new evidence relevant to the likelihood of flight or obstruction of justice even if the defendant has already appeared before a judicial officer.⁶³ The Fifth Circuit disagreed.⁶⁴ The Third and Eighth Circuits have held that the "first appearance" requirement is not violated when a detention hearing is held at the defendant's first appearance before the district court even if the defendant has already appeared before a magistrate judge who did not hold a hearing.⁶⁵ A hearing may be reopened, either before or after a determination by the judicial officer, if the movant proffers material evidence that was previously unavailable.⁶⁶

In United States v. Montalvo-Murillo,⁶⁷ the Supreme Court held that the failure to comply with the time requirements of section 3142(f) need not result in a defendant's release.⁶⁸ The defendant had made several court appearances at proceedings that were not detention hearings. Eventually, a magistrate judge held a detention hearing and, finding that the defendant was neither a flight risk nor dangerous, ordered him released. On review of the order, the district court found that the defendant did, in fact, pose a danger to the community, but nevertheless it ordered the defendant released because of noncompliance with section 3142(f)'s time requirements.⁶⁹ The Tenth Circuit affirmed.⁷⁰

The Supreme Court reversed: "Neither the timing requirements nor any other part of the Act can be read to require, or even suggest, that a timing error must result in a release of a person who should otherwise be detained."⁷¹ Thus, "once the Government discovers that the time limits have expired, it may ask for a prompt detention hearing."⁷² The Court implied that such a hearing should be granted and that the timing error should ordinarily not result in release, but acknowledged that "[i]t is conceivable that some combination of procedural irregularities could render a detention hearing so flawed that it would not constitute 'a hearing pursuant to [section 3142] subsection (f).'"⁷³ The Court also left open the possibility of some remedy—other than release of the defendant—for a violation of the timing requirements of section 3142(f).⁷⁴ Thus, the Court made clear that, although a violation of section 3142(f) need not result in release, the timing requirements are nevertheless binding on the judicial officer.⁷⁵

Courts have interpreted the requirement flexibly in one common circumstance, holding that where the defendant is arrested outside the charging district, the detention hearing may be held at the first appearance following removal.⁷⁶

b. continuances

As noted, the detention hearing must be held immediately, unless the defendant or the government moves for a continuance. The statute sharply limits the length of continuances. Except for good cause, continuances are limited to three days for the government and five days for the defendant.⁷⁷ The Ninth and Eleventh Circuits have said that convenience of counsel or the court does not satisfy the good-cause requirement.⁷⁸ The Eleventh Circuit held that a magistrate judge erred in granting a continuance of more than five days to permit other defendants to obtain counsel.⁷⁹ The Second Circuit held the good-cause requirement to be satisfied by “substantial reasons pertinent to protection of the rights of the defendants”⁸⁰—the need to obtain witnesses and affidavits from abroad and the need for defense counsel to obtain interpreters to help interview non-English-speaking clients.

The First and Fifth Circuits deem defendants to have acquiesced in a continuance if they do not make a timely objection to a proposed continuance.⁸¹

The statute provides for a continuance on motion of defense counsel or the government, but makes no explicit provision for a continuance on the court's own motion. The Ninth and Eleventh Circuits have held that detention hearings may not be continued on the court's own motion.⁸² The D.C. and Fifth Circuits have permitted such continuances in special circumstances.⁸³ During a continuance, the defendant shall be detained. Further, on its own motion or the government's, the court may order a medical examination of a person who appears to be a narcotics addict to determine whether he or she is one.

c. waiver by defendant

The only circuits to consider the question have held that defendants may waive the right to a detention hearing (or a hearing within the statutorily prescribed time frame). In a Fourth Circuit case, the defendants told the magistrate judge that they wanted to remain in custody for their own protection. As a result, the magistrate judge did not conduct an evidentiary hearing or make written findings. Later, however, the defendants moved for their immediate release on the ground that they had an unwaivable right to a detention hearing. The original panel agreed, but the en banc court held that defendants may waive both the time requirements and the detention hearing itself.⁸⁴ The Second Circuit reached the same conclusion.⁸⁵

G. Rebuttable Presumptions

1. The Two Presumptions

The statute creates two rebuttable presumptions: the “previous-violator presumption” and the “drug-and-firearm-offender presumption.”⁸⁶ The previous-violator presumption is that no conditions of release will reasonably assure the safety of the community where the defendant is accused of one of numerous specified crimes, such as crimes of violence, and has previously been convicted of committing one of the specified crimes while free on bail.

The drug-and-firearm-offender presumption is that no conditions of release will reasonably assure the defendant’s appearance and the safety of the community where a judicial officer finds probable cause to believe that the defendant has committed a federal drug offense carrying a maximum prison term of ten years or more or has used a firearm to commit a felony.⁸⁷

As of this writing, no published case law specifically addresses the previous-violator presumption. However, the First Circuit has suggested that an analysis of the drug-and-firearm-offender presumption, discussed below, would also apply to the previous-violator presumption.⁸⁸

2. Application of “Drug-and-Firearm-Offender Presumption”

a. ten-year maximum charge required

The Eleventh Circuit held that for drug charges to trigger the drug-and-firearm-offender presumption, the defendant must be charged with at least one offense separately carrying a ten-year maximum sentence. The presumption does not arise simply because the combined maximum sentences on all drug charges exceed ten years.⁸⁹

The First and Fifth Circuits held that the presumption applies whenever the offense carries a penalty of ten years, even if the de-defendant is unlikely to receive a ten-year sentence under the Sentencing Guidelines.⁹⁰ However, the sentence that the defendant is likely to receive can affect the weight given to the presumption.⁹¹

b. probable cause and grand jury indictments

Most courts have held that where a grand jury has indicted a defendant on one of the predicate offenses, a judicial officer need not make an independent finding of probable cause to invoke the drug-and-firearm-offender presumption.⁹² Rather, the indictment itself establishes probable cause that the defendant committed the offense and triggers the presumption that the defendant poses a danger to the community and is a flight risk.

c. formal charge required

The Second Circuit held that the drug-and-firearm-offender presumption cannot arise if the defendant has not yet been charged with the firearm offense by a “valid complaint or indictment,” even if there may be probable cause to believe that the defendant appearing at a detention hearing on other charges has also committed a firearm violation.⁹³

d. effect of presumption

The drug-and-firearm-offender presumption imposes on defendants only a burden of production; the burden of persuasion concerning the risk of flight and dangerousness remains with the government.⁹⁴ However, courts have held that when a defendant comes forward with no evidence, the presumption alone supports the conclusion that no conditions of release could reasonably assure the appearance of the defendant and the safety of the community.⁹⁵

To meet its burden, the defense must produce only “some [relevant] evidence.”⁹⁶ The introduction of such evidence, however, does not eliminate the presumption entirely.⁹⁷ Rather, the presumption “remains in the case as one factor of many to be considered by the judicial officer.”⁹⁸ This ensures that the court takes note of the congressional findings that drug traffickers pose special flight risks.⁹⁹

The Seventh Circuit held that to rebut the presumption, defendants need not produce evidence that they are innocent of the charged crime.¹⁰⁰ Rather, they may show that “the specific nature of the crimes charged or . . . something about their individual circumstances” suggests that they are not dangerous or likely to flee.¹⁰¹

The Fifth Circuit held that circumstances are relevant only if germane to the likelihood of appearance or dangerousness; it therefore dismissed as irrelevant a defendant’s contention that detention imposed a severe financial hardship.¹⁰²

The Fifth Circuit stated that, where there has been a full evidentiary hearing in which both sides have presented evidence, “the shifting of and the descriptions of evidentiary burdens become largely irrelevant and the question becomes whether the evidence as a whole supports the conclusions” reached by the trial court.¹⁰³

e. constitutionality

The First Circuit held that the presumption, when construed not to shift the burden of persuasion, does not violate the due process clause of the Fifth Amendment.¹⁰⁴ The Third Circuit held that because the presumption of dangerousness may place the defendant in the position of risking self-incrimination or submitting to pre-trial detention, the judicial officer should grant use immunity to a defendant who seeks to rebut the presumption through his or her own testimony.¹⁰⁵ In an unpublished opinion, the Sixth Circuit appeared to reject this approach.¹⁰⁶ In a case where the presump-

H. Temporary Detention

Section 3142(d) authorizes a judicial officer to order an arrestee temporarily detained for up to ten days if the person is arrested while on pretrial or post-trial release, probation, or parole, or is an alien not admitted to permanent residence, and the judicial officer finds that the arrestee “may flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community.”¹⁰⁹ The court must direct the government to notify the appropriate authorities so that they can take the person into custody. If these authorities do not take the defendant into custody within the ten-day period, a section 3142(f) hearing may be held on the more recent offense. This hearing is separate from the section 3142(d) hearing, and the judicial officer cannot rely on facts previously found to support a section 3142(d) detention.¹¹⁰

All the courts that have considered the question have interpreted section 3142(d) as permitting the government to move under section 3142(f) for a detention hearing at any time during the ten-day period, rather than at the defendant’s first appearance as normally required by section 3142(f).¹¹¹ (However, the Fifth and D.C. cuits have indicated that the better practice is for the government to move under both section 3142(d) and section 3142(f) at the defendant's initial appearance.¹¹² The Fifth, D.C., and Ninth Circuits have indicated that continuances under section 3142(f) cannot extend the detention period beyond ten days.¹¹³ The Seventh Circuit held otherwise.¹¹⁴

The First Circuit has emphasized that it is important for the judicial officer to make clear under which provision detention is being considered. In United States v. Vargas,¹¹⁵ defendants, already detained under section 3142(d), appeared before a magistrate judge for arraignment on another offense. The government indicated that it would "seek to detain" the defendants. The magistrate judge, apparently believing that defense counsel had waived argument on the detention issue, ordered the defendants detained. One of the defendants subsequently moved for release upon expiration of the ten-day period under section 3142(d), arguing that no timely motion for detention under section 3142(f) had been made. Although it upheld the magistrate judge's detention order,¹¹⁶ the First Circuit cautioned that in a situation involving the possibility of pretrial detention under section 3142(e), it is incumbent upon magistrates and district courts to adhere to the requirements of sections 3142(e) and 3142(f) and to clearly indicate when they are proceeding under those provisions so as to avoid the type of confusing circumstances that arose in this case.¹¹⁷

I. Detention Upon Review of a Release Order

Section 3145(a) permits either the government or the defendant to seek review of release conditions imposed by judicial officers of other than the district court or an appellate court. Several circuits interpret this subsection as authorizing a trial court to impose detention at the time of such review.¹¹⁸ The Eighth and Ninth Circuits have gone further, holding that district courts can review a magistrate judge's detention order sua sponte and impose detention at that time.¹¹⁹

J. Evidence and Right to Counsel

I. Right to Counsel

At the detention hearing, defendants have the right to an attorney and the right to appointed counsel if they cannot afford one.¹²⁰ The rules governing admissibility and presentation of evidence in criminal trials do not apply at the detention hearing, and the court has broad discretion to limit the presentation of evidence.¹²¹

2. Hearsay Evidence

Hearsay evidence is generally admissible at a detention hearing.¹²² However, trial courts "should be sensitive to the fact that Congress' authorization of hearsay evidence does not represent a determination that such evidence is always appropriate."¹²³ The

These courts observed that section 3145(a) authorizes the district court to conduct de novo review of a magistrate judge's release order, and reasoned that the district court should therefore have open to it all the options available to the magistrate judge.

First and Third Circuits advise courts to assess the reliability of hearsay evidence and require corroboration when necessary.¹²⁴

3. Proffer Evidence

Section 3142(f) states that defendants may “present information by proffer or otherwise.” The Third Circuit held that the judicial officer may require the defendant to proffer evidence rather than to present live testimony.¹²⁵ The Seventh Circuit held to the contrary.¹²⁶ Several circuits have held that the government may also proceed by way of proffer.¹²⁷ The Third Circuit, however, questioned the validity of relying on a proffer by the government to establish probable cause that the accused committed one of the offenses giving rise to the drug-and-firearm-offender presumption under section 3142(e).¹²⁸

4. Cross-Examination

Section 3142(f) affords defendants an opportunity to cross-examine witnesses appearing at the hearing, but it makes no explicit provision for nonappearing witnesses. Several courts have held that, at least where the defendant makes no specific proffer of how cross-examination will counter the government’s proffered evidence, the court is not required to subpoena the government witnesses.¹²⁹ The Winsor*, 785 F.2d 755, 756–57 (9th Cir. 1986) (where defendant did not make proffer to show that government’s proffer was incorrect, defendant did not have right to cross-examine investigators); United States v. Delker, 757 F.2d 1390, 1397–98 n.4 (3d Cir. 1985) (there was no error in declining to subpoena witnesses; the question whether there is a right to cross-examine where defendant makes specific proffer negating government’s case was left open). See also United States v. Cardenas, 784 F.2d 937, 938 (per curiam), vacated as moot,

Third Circuit noted a few circumstances that militate in favor of subpoenaing a requested witness: the defendant's offer of specific evidence showing unreliability, the lack of a need to protect confidentiality, and the prospect of lengthy detention.¹³⁰ The Eleventh Circuit indicated that if a finding of dangerousness or likelihood of flight rests on the weight of the evidence against the defendant with respect to the charged crime, it would be reversible error not to give the defendant the opportunity to cross-examine witnesses.¹³¹

5. In Camera Evidence

The Bail Reform Act does not specifically address the use of evidence presented in camera. The Third Circuit held, and the Second Circuit indicated in dicta, that reliance on evidence presented in camera is inconsistent with the Act's procedural protections.¹³² The Third Circuit suggested that use of such testimony may run afoul of the confrontation clause.¹³³ In a brief opinion later vacated as moot, the Ninth Circuit rejected a due process challenge to the use of in camera evidence.¹³⁴

Leon, 766 F.2d 77, 80 n.3 (2d Cir. 1985) (court would ordinarily remand for hearing to determine whether testimony presented in camera tainted magistrate judge's conclusion; here, nothing of consequence was revealed, so remand was unnecessary).

Acevedo-Ramos, 755 F.2d 203, 207-09 (1st Cir. 1985) (magistrate judges may test veracity of hearsay by inspection of evidence in camera where confidentiality of sources is necessary).

6. Challenged Evidence

The First and Eighth Circuits held that a district court may rely on evidence whose legality the accused has challenged, at least until a court rules that the material was not legally obtained.¹³⁵

7. Electronic Surveillance

Both the First and Second Circuits upheld the use of evidence obtained by electronic surveillance.¹³⁶ The Second Circuit noted that such material is governed by the ten-day-notice requirement of 18 U.S.C. § 2518 (9).¹³⁷ Acknowledging the potential conflict between the ten-day-notice requirement and the requirement of a prompt detention hearing, the Second Circuit pointed out that if prejudice to the defendant would result from waiver of the ten-day-notice period, the detention hearing may be continued for good cause under section 3142 (f).¹³⁸

8. Psychiatric Examination

The Second Circuit held that judicial officers may not order a psychiatric examination to determine the dangerousness of a defendant; they must base such a determination on evidence adduced at the detention hearing.¹³⁹

K. Hearings Involving Multiple Defendants

Cases involving multiple defendants can pose problems. The Eleventh Circuit recommends that the court make individual determinations on continuances rather than automatically schedule all hearings for the same date.¹⁴⁰ The Third Circuit held that evidence offered at hearings of codefendants may not be considered unless the defendant is given a confrontation opportunity at the defendant's own hearing.¹⁴¹

Where detention hearings are required for a large number of codefendants, the Second Circuit suggests that the court consider alternatives to individual hearings before the same judicial officer: a joint hearing; consolidation to receive testimony of government witnesses common to all the defendants, followed by individual hearings to receive evidence peculiar to each defendant; and assignment of more than one judicial officer to the hearings.¹⁴²

L. Written Findings

Written findings of fact and a written statement of reasons are required when detention is ordered.¹⁴³ The Second Circuit requires that these findings include a statement of the alternatives considered and the reasons for rejecting them.¹⁴⁴

III. Modification of Detention Order

A. Changed Circumstances

Section 3142 (f) expressly authorizes reopening the detention hearing when material information “that was not known to the movant at the time of the hearing” comes to light. Thus, the D.C. Circuit upheld the reopening of a detention hearing when the government sought to put in evidence a ruling on a suppression motion made after the original hearing.¹⁴⁵ However, courts have interpreted this provision strictly, holding that hearings should not be reopened if the evidence was available at the time of the hearing.¹⁴⁶

B. Length of Detention

Speedy Trial Act deadlines limit the length of pretrial detention. As a result of excludable-time provisions, however, defendants in complex cases may be detained far beyond the theoretical ninety-day maximum under the Speedy Trial Act, thus giving rise to due process concerns.

As noted in Part II, the Supreme Court has left open the possibility that detention could become so long that it would violate the defendant’s due process rights.¹⁴⁷ A number of circuit courts have acknowledged that lengthy periods of detention may implicate due process concerns.¹⁴⁸ They have all held that there is no bright line time limit for determining if the defendant has been denied due process; courts must decide on a case-by-case basis and in light of all the circumstances.¹⁴⁹ The factors to be considered include some of the factors relevant in the original detention decision—the seriousness of the charges, the strength of the government’s case, the risk of flight or dangerousness to the community—as well as “the length of detention that has in fact occurred or may occur in the future, the non-speculative nature of future detention, the complexity of the case, and whether the strategy of one side or the other occasions the delay.”¹⁵⁰ The Fifth Circuit requires that the judicial officer consider all these factors.¹⁵¹

Some circuits center the inquiry on the issue of fault. For example, the Second Circuit identifies three factors relevant to whether pretrial detention violates due process: “(i) the length of detention; (ii) the extent of the prosecution’s responsibility for the delay of the trial; and (iii) the strength of the evidence upon which the detention was based.”¹⁵² The Second Circuit held that due process required release of a defendant who had spent thirty-two months in pretrial detention and whose prolonged trial was still several months away. Although it noted that some of the delay resulted from the defendant’s overzealousness, the court observed that, “[o]n the other hand, the government has been reluctant to agree to a severance.”¹⁵³ In one Seventh Circuit case, the defendant had been detained for more than a year, and the court expected that it would be another year before the trial was concluded. Although the court remanded for additional fact-finding, it noted that “the extent of delay is to some extent within the control of defendants themselves, and they cannot be allowed to manufacture the grounds for their constitutional argument.”¹⁵⁴ The court suggested that, absent a showing of government culpability, no amount of time in detention, by itself, can constitute a due process violation.¹⁵⁵ The Ninth Circuit does not go this far, but it does focus the due process inquiry on “the length of confinement in conjunction with the extent to which the prosecution bears responsibility for the delay.”¹⁵⁶ In a case in which the trial was scheduled for ten months after detention began, the court found that the government was not responsible for the delay and, “[u]nder these circumstances, the defendants’ due process rights have not been violated.”¹⁵⁷

After a defendant’s conviction, the claim that pretrial detention violated due process is moot.¹⁵⁸ Of course, a defendant is free to argue that unlawful pretrial detention prejudiced his or her ability to defend himself or herself.¹⁵⁹

IV. Review by the District Court

The district court may review a magistrate judge's release order on motion by the government or the defendant,¹⁶⁰ but only a detainee may move the district court to revoke or amend a magistrate judge's detention order.¹⁶¹ The review is de novo,¹⁶² and the district court need not defer to the magistrate judge's findings or give specific reasons for rejecting them.¹⁶³ The court may take additional evidence or conduct a new evidentiary hearing when appropriate.¹⁶⁴ Following the hearing, the court should explain, on the record, the reasons for its decision.¹⁶⁵

The Third Circuit advises district courts to consider whether a transcript of the proceedings before the magistrate judge will help determine if more evidence is needed. United States v. Delker, 757 F.2d 1390, 1395 n.3. The Eighth Circuit has held that the district court should have a full de novo evidentiary hearing if either side requests one. United States v. Maull, 773 F.2d 1479, 1481-82 (8th Cir. 1985) (en banc).

¹⁶⁵. The Eleventh Circuit's rule is that the district court may, after independent review, "explicitly adopt the magistrate's pretrial detention order. King*, 849 F.2d 485, 490 (11th Cir. 1988).

Review of a detention or release order shall “be determined promptly.”¹⁶⁶ The statute does not define “promptly” or set forth a remedy for review that is not prompt. (As noted earlier, in the context of an untimely initial hearing, the Supreme Court has said that release is generally not the appropriate remedy.¹⁶⁷) The First Circuit held that, where the district court “was attentive to the need for promptness, but unable to accommodate [the review] because of judicial travel commitments,” delay was excusable.¹⁶⁸ The Ninth Circuit held that a thirty-day delay violates the requirement and that conditional release is an appropriate remedy.¹⁶⁹ However, in a subsequent case, the Ninth Circuit limited this holding to cases where detention is based on risk of flight. The court held that where the detention is based on danger to the community, release is not a proper remedy.¹⁷⁰ The Fifth Circuit agrees.¹⁷¹ The Fourth Circuit has said that automatic release is not an appropriate remedy for any violation of the Act.¹⁷²

V. Review by the Court of Appeals

Both the defendant and the government may directly appeal a trial court's release order without first seeking reconsideration in the trial court. The defendant may also seek direct review of a detention order.

The courts of appeals differ on the standard for reviewing trial court determinations under the Act. The Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, and Eleventh Circuits review de novo the district court's ultimate determination (although they defer to particular findings of fact).¹⁷³ The Second, Fourth, and Fifth Circuits are highly deferential to the district court's determination.¹⁷⁴ The First and Third Circuits are somewhere in between.¹⁷⁵

The First Circuit described its approach as "independent review, tempered by a degree of deference to the determinations made below. . . . [I]ndependent review represents an intermediate level of scrutiny, more rigorous than the abuse-of-discretion or clear-error standards, but stopping short of plenary or de novo review."¹⁷⁶ This standard "cedes particular respect . . . to the lower court's factual determinations," but "[i]f upon careful review of all the facts and the trial judge's reasons the appeals court concludes that a different Chimurenga*, 760 F.2d 400, 405 (2d Cir. 1985). The Fourth and Second Circuits employ a straightforward, "clearly erroneous" standard. In Aron, the Fifth Circuit said that it would affirm the district court's determination "if it is supported by the proceedings below." 904 F.2d at 223. result should have been reached, the detention decision may be amended or reversed.”¹⁷⁷ Similarly, the Third Circuit has applied independent review while giving “respectful consideration” to the lower court’s determination.¹⁷⁸ The First Circuit emphasizes that the scope of review is less deferential if the district court does not provide detailed reasons for its decision.¹⁷⁹

The court of appeals is free to consider material not presented in the district court.¹⁸⁰

VI. Release or Detention Pending Sentence

Section 3143(a) governs the release or detention of defendants “found guilty” and awaiting imposition or execution of a sentence of imprisonment. (There is no explicit rule when the Sentencing Guidelines do not recommend a term of imprisonment.) All convicted defendants, except those convicted of crimes of violence, offenses with a maximum sentence of life imprisonment or death, or certain drug-related offenses carrying a maximum term of ten years or more, must be detained unless the judicial officer finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community if released.¹⁸¹ For release to be in order, then, the judicial officer must find both non-likelihood of flight and non-dangerousness.¹⁸² Release is made in accordance with section 3142.

Generally, defendants convicted of crimes of violence, offenses with a maximum sentence of life imprisonment or death, or drug-related offenses carrying a maximum term of ten years or more—crimes listed in section 3142(f)(1)(A), (B), and (C)—must be detained unless the judicial officer finds (1) “a substantial likelihood that a motion for acquittal or new trial will be granted,” or the government recommends that imprisonment not be imposed; and (2) “by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community.”¹⁸³

The Fifth and Tenth Circuits held that defendants detained under section 3143(a)(2) may be released if the findings of section 3143(a)(1) on flight and danger are met and there are “exceptional reasons why such person’s detention would not be appropriate.”¹⁸⁴

The Sixth Circuit found it error to release a convicted defendant without holding a hearing simply because the court believed that he was not dangerous; the government was entitled to an opportunity to respond to the defendant's evidence and offer its own.¹⁸⁵ The Seventh Circuit has gone further and interpreted section 3143 as establishing a rebuttable presumption of dangerousness, maintaining that the "clear and convincing" standard cannot be met if the defendant offers no evidence, even if the court does not believe the defendant is dangerous.¹⁸⁶

The Second and Sixth Circuits have criticized district courts that relied too much on a defendant's demeanor or the opinions of family members concerning risk of flight or dangerousness.¹⁸⁷

As with pretrial detention, dangerousness under section 3143 is not limited to physical danger.¹⁸⁸

The Second Circuit held that, for the purposes of section 3143 (a), a defendant is "found guilty" the moment a jury returns a guilty verdict, even before the court has entered judgment.¹⁸⁹ Once the defendant has filed an appeal, release under this section is no longer appropriate and section 3143 (b) applies.¹⁹⁰

Legislative history suggests that section 3143 (a) covers those awaiting "execution" of a sentence in order to make clear that a person may be released for a short period after sentencing "for such matters as getting his affairs in order prior to surrendering for service of sentence."¹⁹¹

The Seventh Circuit held that release pursuant to section 3143 (a) is improper if the defendant awaits resentencing not because of an infirmity in the original sentence, but because the vacation of a

VII. Release or Detention Pending Appeal

A. Release Requirements

A defendant who has been sentenced for a crime not listed in section 3142 (f)(1)(A), (B), or (C)—crimes of violence, offenses carrying a maximum sentence of life imprisonment or death, or drug offenses carrying a maximum sentence of ten years or more—and who is pursuing an appeal or a petition for certiorari¹⁹³ must be detained unless the judicial officer finds that the defendant is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the community and “that the appeal is not for the purpose of delay and raises a substantial question of law or fact likely to result in” reversal, a new trial, or a sentence of no imprisonment or imprisonment less than the time already served.¹⁹⁴

If a defendant is appealing conviction for a crime that is listed in subsection (A), (B), or (C), detention is mandatory¹⁹⁵ unless the judicial officer finds no risk of flight or danger and a “substantial question” and finds that “there are exceptional reasons why such person’s detention would not be appropriate.”¹⁹⁶

If the government is appealing a sentence of imprisonment, but the defendant is not, the defendant shall be detained during the appeal.¹⁹⁷

193. In United States v. Snyder, 946 F.2d 1125, 1126 (5th Cir. 1991), the Fifth Circuit held that the district court, court of appeals, and Supreme Court have concurrent jurisdiction to decide whether to release a defendant on bail while a petition for certiorari is pending.

197. 18 U.S.C. § 3143(c).

If release is based on a likelihood of reversal, the court must find a likelihood of reversal on all counts for which imprisonment was imposed.¹⁹⁸

The burden is on the defendant to show that the criteria for release are met.¹⁹⁹ The statute explicitly states that non-likelihood of fleeing and non-dangerousness must be established by clear and convincing evidence.²⁰⁰ It does not address the standard for the determination that the appeal is not for the purpose of delay or the standard for the determination that the appeal raises a substantial question. The Tenth Circuit, the only circuit to address this question, held that the preponderance of evidence standard applies.²⁰¹

The district court must state on the record its reasons for denying release pending appeal.²⁰² The statement of reasons may be made either through written findings or through a transcript of an oral statement.²⁰³ Noting the injustice of a defendant's prevailing on appeal only after serving most of a sentence, the Seventh Circuit urges district courts to "stat[e] in detail their reasons for denying a petition for release pending appeal, especially in a case . . . in which the defendants posed no danger to the community and apparently negligible threat of flight.”²⁰⁴

Note that section 3143(b) applies only to a defendant “who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari.”²⁰⁵ It does not apply to defendants seeking post-conviction relief.²⁰⁶ Thus, the D.C. Circuit held that release is not available pending appeal of the denial of a motion for a new trial made pursuant to Federal Rule of Criminal Procedure 33.²⁰⁷

B. Definitions of “Substantial Question” and “Likely”²⁰⁸

The definition of “substantial question of law or fact” varies slightly among the circuits. The Eleventh Circuit defines it as “a ‘close’ question or one that very well could be decided the other way,”²⁰⁹ and most circuits have adopted some version of this definition.²¹⁰ The Ninth Circuit declined to endorse the “close” question standard, holding instead that the question must be “fairly

Although the likelihood of prevailing on appeal is, by the terms of the statute, applicable only to determinations of release pending appeal, not determinations of release pending sentencing, the First Circuit has held that in the latter context, it may be relevant to the issue of likelihood of flight. *United States v. debatable.”²¹¹ The Third Circuit has indicated its preference for the “fairly debatable” criterion.²¹²

The requirement that the substantial question be “likely” to result in reversal, a new trial, or a sentence without imprisonment is not as straightforward as it may seem. The Third Circuit rejected the literal interpretation, which implies that a court should grant bail pending appeal only if it finds its own rulings likely to be reversed,²¹³ and held that the “likely” requirement is met as long as the substantial question is “so integral to the merits of the conviction on which defendant is to be imprisoned that a contrary appellate holding is likely to require reversal of the conviction.”²¹⁴ If the alleged error would be deemed harmless error, or was not adequately preserved for appeal, it does not meet this requirement.²¹⁵ Several courts have adopted the Third Circuit’s approach.²¹⁶ Other courts have held that a determination that the defendant’s appeal is “likely” to result in reversal, a new trial, or a sentence without imprisonment means this result is “more probable than not.”²¹⁷ The Seventh Circuit specifies that “section 3143(b) ‘requires an

C. “Exceptional Reasons”

As noted, defendants convicted of certain crimes, or crimes carrying certain sentences, must be detained absent “exceptional reasons” why their detention is inappropriate.²¹⁹ The Second Circuit has noted that because the “legislative history on the issue [of what constitutes exceptional reasons] is sparse and uninformative,” a “case by case evaluation is essential” with broad discretion given to the trial judge.²²⁰ The court upheld a district court’s determination that exceptional circumstances were present where the defendant’s appeal challenged the very element of the crime that entailed the “violence” justifying detention.

VIII. Release or Detention of a Material Witness

As under prior law, a material witness is subject to detention if certain conditions, including the inadequacy of preserving the witness's testimony through deposition, are met.²²¹ One district court held that material witnesses arrested pursuant to section 3144 have a right to a detention hearing and to appointed counsel if they are unable to retain counsel.²²²

IX. Offense Committed While on Bail

Under 18 U.S.C. § 3147, a person convicted of another offense while released under the Bail Reform Act shall receive up to a ten-year term of imprisonment if the offense is a felony and up to one year if a misdemeanor, to run consecutively with the sentence imposed for the original offense.²²³ In a Ninth Circuit case,²²⁴ the defendant pled guilty to several offenses committed while on release and one that was not committed while on release. The latter carried the longest sentence, fifty-one months. The sentences were imposed concurrently, totaling fifty-one months, with a section 3147 enhancement of fourteen months to run consecutively. The defendant argued that section 3147 enhancements should run consecutively only to sentences for offenses committed during release on bail. The court disagreed: “The plain language of section 3147 (1) requires the enhancement term to run consecutively to any other sentence of imprisonment regardless of when the underlying offense was committed.”²²⁵

The Fifth Circuit clarified that a section 3147 enhancement applies to the sentence for the new crime committed while on release, not to the original crime for which the defendant was on release.²²⁶ The Fifth Circuit also noted that section 3147 applies only to federal offenses committed while the defendant is on release, not to state offenses.²²⁷

Noting section 3142(h)(2)(A)’s requirement that a releasing judge notify a person of “the penalties for violating a condition of release,

However, the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 repealed section 3651, and the Supreme Court decision applies only to offenses committed before Nov. 1, 1987.

including the penalties for committing an offense while on pretrial release,” the Fourth, Fifth, and Seventh Circuits held that imposition of an additional sentence pursuant to section 3147 is improper if the defendant was not notified of the possibility of such a penalty when released on bail.²²⁸ The Third and Sixth Circuits disagree and have held that section 3147 does not incorporate the notice requirements of section 3142.²²⁹

A number of defendants have protested their enhanced sentences, arguing that section 3147 establishes an independent offense for which they cannot be punished absent separate indictment and trial. The courts have rejected that contention, holding that section 3147 is a sentence-enhancement provision; it does not establish a separate offense.²³⁰

X. Sanctions

A. Failure to Appear

Section 3146 specifies the sanctions, including fines, imprisonment, and forfeiture, for failure to appear in court and failure to surrender for service of sentence.²³¹ Under section 3146(c), “uncontrollable circumstances” not caused by the defendant is an affirmative defense, provided the person appeared or surrendered as soon as the circumstances ceased to exist.

Courts require the failure to appear to be “willful” or “knowing.”²³² However, the Tenth Circuit has twice sustained convictions where defendants lacked actual notice of the court proceeding in question.²³³ In one case, the defendant, a fugitive for an extended period, claimed he did not knowingly fail to appear on the date in question because he only subsequently learned the date. Finding that failure to appear is a continuing offense, the court held that the government need not prove an exact date for the completed offense and that the defendant should have contacted the court.²³⁴ The Tenth Circuit rejected another defendant’s contention that his failure to appear could not be willful because he never received notice of the proceeding: the defendant “was a fugitive as soon as he failed to comply with the terms of the supervised release and absented himself. . . . [He] made no attempt to contact his attorney or the court. . . . Under these circumstances no actual notice to the defendant was necessary. The notice to his attorney was sufficient.”²³⁵

²³¹. See 18 U.S.C. § 3146 (b), (d).

²³⁵. United States v. Simmons, 912 F.2d 1215, 1217 (10th Cir. 1990).

The Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Eleventh Circuits have rejected the claim that double jeopardy prohibits prosecution under section 3146 where the failure to appear was already the basis for an enhancement of the sentence for the original offense.²³⁶

The Sixth and Seventh Circuits held that when a court in one district orders a defendant to appear before a court in another district, either court has jurisdiction over a prosecution for failure to appear.²³⁷

B. Contempt

In addition to revocation of release, discussed in Part I, contempt proceedings may be initiated against a person who violates a release condition.²³⁸

XI. Credit Toward Detention

Section 3585(b) of the Sentencing Reform Act gives a defendant credit toward the term of imprisonment for time spent in official detention before the commencement of the sentence (1) for the offense for which the sentence was imposed, or (2) for any other charge for which the defendant was arrested after he or she committed the offense for which the sentence was imposed, provided it has not been credited toward another sentence.

In United States v. Wilson,²³⁹ the Supreme Court resolved a circuit split, holding that the authority to compute credit belongs to the U.S. Attorney General, who has delegated that authority to the Bureau of Prisons.²⁴⁰ Prisoners may seek administrative review of the computation of credit and, after exhausting administrative remedies, may pursue judicial review.²⁴¹

The courts have held that release on bail bond is not official detention warranting credit under section 3585(b), even if restrictions on release include home confinement.²⁴² Similarly, the Eighth Circuit held that house arrest as a pretrial release restriction is not official detention,²⁴³ and the First Circuit held that post-sentence, presurrender home confinement is not official detention.²⁴⁴ Likewise, the Eighth and Tenth Circuits held that presentence

240. Before the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984, the governing statute, 18 U.S.C. § 3568, explicitly gave the Attorney General this authority. residence in a halfway house is not official detention.²⁴⁵ The Tenth Circuit stated that the key is whether the confinement “equal[s] the deprivation of liberty” experienced by a person in prison. The Tenth Circuit has left open the possibility that time in a level I correctional services facility would be credited toward a defendant’s term of imprisonment.²⁴⁶

In contrast, the Ninth Circuit held that pretrial residence in a community treatment center is “official detention” and should be credited.²⁴⁷ The Eleventh Circuit held that time spent in a state prison can be credited if the defendant establishes that federal law enforcement officials took the initiative in getting the state to take him or her into custody.²⁴⁸ The Sixth and Tenth Circuits held that pretrial detention for an unrelated state crime is “official detention,” provided that the detention is imposed after the defendant committed the federal offense for which he or she is being sentenced and it has not been credited toward another federal or state sentence.²⁴⁹

The Fifth and Tenth Circuits held that credit for official detention is applied only to a term of imprisonment, not to a term of probation.²⁵⁰

The Second Circuit held that incarceration in civil contempt is not credited to the defendant’s subsequent term for criminal contempt.²⁵¹

Appendix A

The Bail Reform Act of 1984 18 U.S.C. §§ 3141–3150, 3156

§ 3141. Release and detention authority generally

(a) Pending trial.—A judicial officer authorized to order the arrest of a person under section 3041 of this title before whom an arrested person is brought shall order that such person be released or detained, pending judicial proceedings, under this chapter.

(b) Pending sentence or appeal.—A judicial officer of a court of original jurisdiction over an offense, or a judicial officer of a Federal appellate court, shall order that, pending imposition or execution of sentence, or pending appeal of conviction or sentence, a person be released or detained under this chapter.

§ 3142. Release or detention of a defendant pending trial

(a) In general.—Upon the appearance before a judicial officer of a person charged with an offense, the judicial officer shall issue an order that, pending trial, the person be—

- (1) released on personal recognizance or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond, under subsection (b) of this section;
- (2) released on a condition or combination of conditions under subsection (c) of this section;
- (3) temporarily detained to permit revocation of conditional release, deportation, or exclusion under subsection (d) of this section; or
- (4) detained under subsection (e) of this section.

(b) Release on personal recognizance or unsecured appearance bond.—The judicial officer shall order the pretrial release of the person on personal recognizance, or upon execution of an unsecured appearance bond in an amount specified by the court, subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release, unless the judicial officer determines that such release will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community.

(c) Release on conditions.—(1) If the judicial officer determines that the release described in subsection (b) of this section will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required or will endanger the safety of any other person or the community, such judicial officer shall order the pretrial release of the person—

(A) subject to the condition that the person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release; and

(B) subject to the least restrictive further condition, or combination of conditions, that such judicial officer determines will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, which may include the condition that the person—

(i) remain in the custody of a designated person, who agrees to assume supervision and to report any violation of a release condition to the court, if the designated person is able reasonably to assure the judicial officer that the person will appear as required and will not pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community;

(ii) maintain employment, or, if unemployed, actively seek employment;

(iii) maintain or commence an educational program;

(iv) abide by specified restrictions on personal associations, place of abode, or travel;

(v) avoid all contact with an alleged victim of the crime and with a potential witness who may testify concerning the offense;

(vi) report on a regular basis to a designated law enforcement agency, pretrial services agency, or other agency;

(vii) comply with a specified curfew;

(viii) refrain from possessing a firearm, destructive device, or other dangerous weapon;

(ix) refrain from excessive use of alcohol, or any use of a narcotic drug or other controlled substance, as defined in section 102 of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C.

§ 802), without a prescription by a licensed medical practitioner;

(x) undergo available medical, psychological, or psychiatric treatment, including treatment for drug or alcohol dependency, and remain in a specified institution if required for that purpose;

(xi) execute an agreement to forfeit upon failing to appear as required, property of a sufficient unencumbered value, including money, as is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required, and shall provide the court with proof of ownership and the value of the property along with information regarding existing encumbrances as the judicial officer may require;

(xii) execute a bail bond with solvent sureties; who will execute an agreement to forfeit in such amount as is reasonably necessary to assure appearance of the person as required and shall provide the court with information regarding the value of the assets and liabilities of the surety if other than an approved surety and the nature and extent of encumbrances against the surety's property; such surety shall have a net worth which shall have sufficient unencumbered value to pay the amount of the bail bond;

(xiii) return to custody for specified hours following release for employment, schooling, or other limited purposes; and

(xiv) satisfy any other condition that is reasonably necessary to assure the appearance of the person as required and to assure the safety of any other person and the community.

(2) The judicial officer may not impose a financial condition that results in the pretrial detention of the person.

(3) The judicial officer may at any time amend the order to impose additional or different conditions of release.

(d) Temporary detention to permit revocation of conditional release, deportation, or exclusion.

—If the judicial officer determines that—

(1) such person—

(A) is, and was at the time the offense was committed, on—

(i) release pending trial for a felony under Federal, State, or local law;

(ii) release pending imposition or execution of sentence, appeal of sentence or conviction, or completion of sentence, for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

(iii) probation or parole for any offense under Federal, State, or local law; or

(B) is not a citizen of the United States or lawfully admitted for permanent residence, as defined in section 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. § 1101(a)(20)); and

(2) the person may flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community; such judicial officer shall order the detention of the person, for a period of not more than ten days, excluding Saturdays, Sundays, and holidays, and direct the attorney for the Government to notify the appropriate court, probation or parole official, or State or local law enforcement official, or the appropriate official of the Immigration and Naturalization Service. If the official fails or declines to take the person into custody during that period, the person shall be treated in accordance with the other provisions of this section, notwithstanding the applicability of other provisions of law governing release pending trial or deportation or exclusion proceedings. If temporary detention is sought under paragraph (1)(B) of this subsection, the person has the burden of proving to the court such person's United States citizenship or lawful admission for permanent residence.

(e) Detention.—If, after a hearing pursuant to the provisions of subsection (f) of this section, the judicial officer finds that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, such judicial officer shall order the detention of the person before trial. In a case described in subsection (f)(1) of this section, a rebuttable presumption arises that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community if such judicial officer finds that—

(1) the person has been convicted of a Federal offense that is described in subsection (f)(1) of this section, or of a State or local offense that would have been an offense described in subsection (f)(1) of this section if a circumstance giving rise to Federal jurisdiction had existed;

- (2) the offense described in paragraph (1) of this subsection was committed while the person was on release pending trial for a Federal, State, or local offense; and
- (3) a period of not more than five years has elapsed since the date of conviction, or the release of the person from imprisonment, for the offense described in paragraph (1) of this subsection, whichever is later.

Subject to rebuttal by the person, it shall be presumed that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of the community if the judicial officer finds that there is probable cause to believe that the person committed an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. § 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. § 951 et seq.), the Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1901 et seq.), or an offense under section 924 (c) of title 18 of the United States Code.

(f) Detention hearing.—The judicial officer shall hold a hearing to determine whether any condition or combination of conditions set forth in subsection (c) of this section will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community—

- (i) upon motion of the attorney for the Government, in a case that involves—
 - (A) a crime of violence;
 - (B) an offense for which the maximum sentence is life imprisonment or death;
 - (C) an offense for which a maximum term of imprisonment of ten years or more is prescribed in the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. § 801 et seq.), the Controlled Substances Import and Export Act (21 U.S.C. § 951 et seq.), or the Maritime Drug Law Enforcement Act (46 U.S.C. App. 1901 et seq.); or
 - (D) any felony if the person has been convicted of two or more offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph, or two or more State or local offenses that would have been offenses described in subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph if a circumstance giving rise to

Federal jurisdiction had existed, or a combination of such offenses; or

(2) upon motion of the attorney for the Government or upon the judicial officer's own motion, in a case that involves—

(A) a serious risk that the person will flee; or

(B) a serious risk that the person will obstruct or attempt to obstruct justice, or threaten, injure, or intimidate, or attempt to threaten, injure, or intimidate, a prospective witness or juror.

The hearing shall be held immediately upon the person's first appearance before the judicial officer unless that person, or the attorney for the Government, seeks a continuance. Except for good cause, a continuance on motion of the person may not exceed five days, and a continuance on motion of the attorney for the Government may not exceed three days. During a continuance, the person shall be detained, and the judicial officer, on motion of the attorney for the Government or sua sponte, may order that, while in custody, a person who appears to be a narcotics addict receive a medical examination to determine whether such person is an addict. At the hearing, such person has the right to be represented by counsel, and, if financially unable to obtain adequate representation, to have counsel appointed. The person shall be afforded an opportunity to testify, to present witnesses, to cross-examine witnesses who appear at the hearing, and to present information by proffer or otherwise. The rules concerning admissibility of evidence in criminal trials do not apply to the presentation and consideration of information at the hearing. The facts the judicial officer uses to support a finding pursuant to subsection (e) that no condition or combination of conditions will reasonably assure the safety of any other person and the community shall be supported by clear and convincing evidence. The person may be detained pending completion of the hearing. The hearing may be reopened before or after a determination by the judicial officer, at any time before trial if the judicial officer finds that information exists that was not known to the movant at the time of the hearing and that has a material bearing on the issue whether there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community.

(g) Factors to be considered.—The judicial officer shall, in determining whether there are conditions of release that will reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required and the safety of any other person and the community, take into account the available information concerning—

- (1) the nature and circumstances of the offense charged, including whether the offense is a crime of violence or involves a narcotic drug;
- (2) the weight of the evidence against the person;
- (3) the history and characteristics of the person, including—
 - (A) the person's character, physical and mental condition, family ties, employment, financial resources, length of residence in the community, community ties, past conduct, history relating to drug or alcohol abuse, criminal history, and record concerning appearance at court proceedings; and
 - (B) whether, at the time of the current offense or arrest, the person was on probation, on parole, or on other release pending trial, sentencing, appeal, or completion of sentence for an offense under Federal, State, or local law; and
- (4) the nature and seriousness of the danger to any person or the community that would be posed by the person's release. In considering the conditions of release described in subsection (c)(1)(B)(xi) or (c)(1)(B)(xii) of this section, the judicial officer may upon his own motion, or shall upon the motion of the Government, conduct an inquiry into the source of the property to be designated for potential forfeiture or offered as collateral to secure a bond, and shall decline to accept the designation, or the use as collateral, of property that, because of its source, will not reasonably assure the appearance of the person as required.

(h) Contents of release order.—In a release order issued under subsection (b) or (c) of this section, the judicial officer shall—

- (1) include a written statement that sets forth all the conditions to which the release is subject, in a manner sufficiently clear and specific to serve as a guide for the person's conduct; and
- (2) advise the person of—
 - (A) the penalties for violating a condition of release, including the penalties for committing an offense while on pretrial release;

(B) the consequences of violating a condition of release, including the immediate issuance of a warrant for the person's arrest; and

(C) sections 1503 of this title (relating to intimidation of witnesses, jurors, and officers of the court), 1510 (relating to obstruction of criminal investigations), 1512 (tampering with a witness, victim, or an informant), and 1513 (retaliating against a witness, victim, or an informant).

(i) Contents of detention order.—In a detention order issued under subsection (e) of this section, the judicial officer shall—

(1) include written findings of fact and a written statement of the reasons for the detention;

(2) direct that the person be committed to the custody of the Attorney General for confinement in a corrections facility separate, to the extent practicable, from persons awaiting or serving sentences or being held in custody pending appeal;

(3) direct that the person be afforded reasonable opportunity for private consultation with counsel; and

(4) direct that, on order of a court of the United States or on request of an attorney for the Government, the person in charge of the corrections facility in which the person is confined deliver the person to a United States marshal for the purpose of an appearance in connection with a court proceeding.

The judicial officer may, by subsequent order, permit the temporary release of the person, in the custody of a United States marshal or another appropriate person, to the extent that the judicial officer determines such release to be necessary for preparation of the person's defense or for another compelling reason.

(j) Presumption of innocence.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as modifying or limiting the presumption of innocence.

§ 3143 . Release or detention of a defendant pending sentence or appeal

(a) Release or detention pending sentence.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense and who is awaiting imposition or execution of sentence, other than a person for whom the applicable guideline promulgated pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 994 does not recommend a term of imprisonment, be detained, unless the judicial officer finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community if released under section 3142 (b) or (c). If the judicial officer makes such a finding, such judicial officer shall order the release of the person in accordance with section 3142 (b) or (c).

(2) The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense in a case described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (f)(1) of section 3142 and is awaiting imposition or execution of sentence be detained unless—

- (A)(i) the judicial officer finds there is a substantial likelihood that a motion for acquittal or new trial will be granted; or
- (ii) an attorney for the Government has recommended that no sentence of imprisonment be imposed on the person; and
- (B) the judicial officer finds by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to any other person or the community.

(b) Release or detention pending appeal by the defendant.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari, be detained, unless the judicial officer finds—

- (A) by clear and convincing evidence that the person is not likely to flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community if released under section 3142 (b) or (c) of this title; and
- (B) that the appeal is not for the purpose of delay and raises a substantial question of law or fact likely to result in—
 - (i) reversal,
 - (ii) an order for a new trial,
 - (iii) a sentence that does not include a term of imprisonment, or
 - (iv) a reduced sentence to a term of imprisonment less than the total of the time already served plus the expected duration of the appeal process.

If the judicial officer makes such findings, such judicial officer shall order the release of the person in accordance with section 3142 (b) or

(c) of this title, except that in the circumstance described in paragraph (b)(2)(D), the judicial officer shall order the detention terminated at the expiration of the likely reduced sentence.

(2) The judicial officer shall order that a person who has been found guilty of an offense in a case described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C) of subsection (f)(1) of section 3142 and sentenced to a term of imprisonment, and who has filed an appeal or a petition for a writ of certiorari, be detained.

(c) Release or detention pending appeal by the government.—The judicial officer shall treat a defendant in a case in which an appeal has been taken by the United States under section 3731 of this title, in accordance with section 3142 of this title, unless the defendant is otherwise subject to a release or detention order. Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the judicial officer, in a case in which an appeal has been taken by the United States under section 3742, shall—

(1) if the person has been sentenced to a term of imprisonment, order that person detained; and

(2) in any other circumstance, release or detain the person under section 3142.

§ 3144. Release or detention of a material witness

If it appears from an affidavit filed by a party that the testimony of a person is material in a criminal proceeding, and if it is shown that it may become impracticable to secure the presence of the person by subpoena, a judicial officer may order the arrest of the person and treat the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142 of this title. No material witness may be detained because of inability to comply with any condition of release if the testimony of such witness can adequately be secured by deposition, and if further detention is not necessary to prevent a failure of justice. Release of a material witness may be delayed for a reasonable period of time until the deposition of the witness can be taken pursuant to the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure.

§ 3145. Review and appeal of a release or detention order

(a) Review of a release order.—If a person is ordered released by a magistrate, or by a person other than a judge of a court having original jurisdiction over the offense and other than a Federal appellate court—

- (1) the attorney for the Government may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for revocation of the order or amendment of the conditions of release; and
- (2) the person may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for amendment of the conditions of release.

The motion shall be determined promptly.

(b) Review of a detention order.—If a person is ordered detained by a magistrate, or by a person other than a judge of a court having original jurisdiction over the offense and other than a Federal appellate court, the person may file, with the court having original jurisdiction over the offense, a motion for revocation or amendment of the order. The motion shall be determined promptly.

(c) Appeal from a release or detention order.—An appeal from a release or detention order, or from a decision denying revocation or amendment of such an order, is governed by the provisions of section 1291 of title 28 and section 3731 of this title. The appeal shall be determined promptly. A person subject to detention pursuant to section 3143 (a)(2) or (b)(2), and who meets the conditions of release set forth in section 3143 (a)(1) or (b)(1), may be ordered released, under appropriate conditions, by the judicial officer, if it is clearly shown that there are exceptional reasons why such person's detention would not be appropriate.

§ 3146. Penalty for failure to appear

(a) Offense.—Whoever, having been released under this chapter knowingly—

- (1) fails to appear before a court as required by the conditions of release; or
- (2) fails to surrender for service of sentence pursuant to a court order; shall be punished as provided in subsection (b) of this section.

(b) Punishment.—(1) The punishment for an offense under this section is—

- (A) if the person was released in connection with a charge of, or while awaiting sentence, surrender for service of sentence, or appeal or certiorari after conviction for—
- (i) an offense punishable by death, life imprisonment, or imprisonment for a term of 15 years or more, a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than ten years, or both;
 - (ii) an offense punishable by imprisonment for a term of five years or more, a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both;
 - (iii) any other felony, a fine under this title or imprisonment for not more than two years, or both; or
 - (iv) a misdemeanor, a fine under this chapter or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both; and
- (B) if the person was released for appearance as a material witness, a fine under this chapter or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.
- (2) A term of imprisonment imposed under this section shall be consecutive to the sentence of imprisonment for any other offense.
- (c) Affirmative defense.—It is an affirmative defense to a prosecution under this section that uncontrollable circumstances prevented the person from appearing or surrendering, and that the person did not contribute to the creation of such circumstances in reckless disregard of the requirement to appear or surrender, and that the person appeared or surrendered as soon as such circumstances ceased to exist.
- (d) Declaration of forfeiture.—If a person fails to appear before a court as required, and the person executed an appearance bond pursuant to section 3142(b) of this title or is subject to the release condition set forth in clause (xi) or (xii) of section 3142(c)(1)(B) of this title, the judicial officer may, regardless of whether the person has been charged with an offense under this section, declare any property designated pursuant to that section to be forfeited to the United States.

§ 3147. Penalty for an offense committed while on release

A person convicted of an offense committed while released under this chapter shall be sentenced, in addition to the sentence prescribed for the offense to—

- (1) a term of imprisonment of not more than ten years if the offense is a felony; or
- (2) a term of imprisonment of not more than one year if the offense is a misdemeanor.

A term of imprisonment imposed under this section shall be consecutive to any other sentence of imprisonment.

Section applicable to offenses committed prior to November 1, 1987

This section as in effect prior to amendment by Pub. L. No. 98-473, read as follows:

§ 3147. Penalty for an offense committed while on release

A person convicted of an offense committed while released under this chapter shall be sentenced, in addition to the sentence prescribed for the offense, to—

- (1) a term of imprisonment of not less than two years and not more than ten years if the offense is a felony; or
- (2) a term of imprisonment of not less than ninety days and not more than one year if the offense is a misdemeanor.

A term of imprisonment imposed under this section shall be consecutive to any other sentence of imprisonment.

For applicability of sentencing provisions to offenses, see Effective Date and Savings Provisions, etc., note, section 235 of Pub. L. No. 98-473, as amended, set out under section 3551 of this title.

§ 3148. Sanctions for violation of a release condition

(a) Available sanctions.—A person who has been released under section 3142 of this title, and who has violated a condition of his release, is subject to a revocation of release, an order of detention, and a prosecution for contempt of court.

(b) Revocation of release.—The attorney for the Government may initiate a proceeding for revocation of an order of release by filing a motion with the district court. A judicial officer may issue a warrant for the arrest of a person charged with violating a condition of release, and the person shall be brought before a judicial officer in the district in which such person's arrest was ordered for a proceeding in accordance with this section. To the extent practicable, a person charged with violating the condition of release that such person not commit a Federal, State, or local crime during the period of release, shall be brought before the judicial officer who ordered the release and whose order is alleged to have been violated. The judicial officer shall enter an order of revocation and detention if, after a hearing, the judicial officer—

(1) finds that there is—

(A) probable cause to believe that the person has committed a Federal, State, or local crime while on release; or

(B) clear and convincing evidence that the person has violated any other condition of release; and

(2) finds that—

(A) based on the factors set forth in section 3142(g) of this title, there is no condition or combination of conditions of release that will assure that the person will not flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community; or

(B) the person is unlikely to abide by any condition or combination of conditions of release.

If there is probable cause to believe that, while on release, the person committed a Federal, State, or local felony, a rebuttable presumption arises that no condition or combination of conditions will assure that the person will not pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community. If the judicial officer finds that there are conditions of release that will assure that the person will not flee or pose a danger to the safety of any other person or the community, and that the person will abide by such conditions, the judicial officer shall treat the person in accordance with the provisions of section 3142 of this title and may amend the conditions of release accordingly.

(c) Prosecution for contempt.—The judicial officer may commence a prosecution for contempt, under section 401 of this title, if the person has violated a condition of release.

§ 3149. Surrender of an offender by a surety

A person charged with an offense, who is released upon the execution of an appearance bond with a surety, may be arrested by the surety, and if so arrested, shall be delivered promptly to a United States marshal and brought before a judicial officer. The judicial officer shall determine in accordance with the provisions of section 3148(b) whether to revoke the release of the person, and may absolve the surety of responsibility to pay all or part of the bond in accordance with the provisions of Rule 46 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure. The person so committed shall be held in official detention until released pursuant to this chapter or another provision of law.

§ 3150. Applicability to a case removed from a State court

The provisions of this chapter apply to a criminal case removed to a Federal court from a State court.

§ 3156. Definitions

(a) As used in sections 3141–3150 of this chapter—

- (1) the term “judicial officer” means, unless otherwise indicated, any person or court authorized pursuant to section 3041 of this title, or the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure, to detain or release a person before trial or sentencing or pending appeal in a court of the United States, and any judge of the Superior Court of the District of Columbia;
- (2) the term “offense” means any criminal offense, other than an offense triable by court-martial, military commission, provost court, or other military tribunal, which is in violation of an Act of Congress and is triable in any court established by Act of Congress;
- (3) the term “felony” means an offense punishable by a maximum term of imprisonment of more than one year; and
- (4) the term “crime of violence” means—
 - (A) an offense that has as an element of the offense the use, attempted use, or threatened use of physical force against the person or property of another; or
 - (B) any other offense that is a felony and that, by its nature, involves a substantial risk that physical force against the person or property of another may be used in the course of committing the offense.

Appendix B

The Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 (Selected Provision) 18 U.S.C. § 3585

§ 3585. Calculation of a term of imprisonment

(a) Commencement of sentence.—A sentence to a term of imprisonment commences on the date the defendant is received in custody awaiting transportation to, or arrives voluntarily to commence service of sentence at, the official detention facility at which the sentence is to be served.

(b) Credit for prior custody.—A defendant shall be given credit toward the service of a term of imprisonment for any time he has spent in official detention prior to the date the sentence commences—

- (1) as a result of the offense for which the sentence was imposed; or
- (2) as a result of any other charge for which the defendant was arrested after the commission of the offense for which the sentence was imposed; that has not been credited against another sentence.
