

Campaign Finance Regulations for Candidates Opposing Self-Funded Candidates

McComish v. Brewer
(Roslyn O. Silver, D. Ariz. 2:08-cv-1550)

On August 21, 2008, candidates for office in Arizona filed a federal complaint challenging a campaign finance provision that provided a benefit to candidates whose challengers exceeded statutory thresholds of expenditures. The suit was filed eight weeks after a Supreme Court decision invalidating a similar law. Reluctant to disrupt the finances of an ongoing campaign season, the district court denied immediate injunctive relief. After full litigation, the district court struck down the campaign finance scheme and the Supreme Court ultimately affirmed the district court's ruling.

Eight weeks after the Supreme Court's invalidation on June 26, 2008, of the Millionaire Amendment, which increased contribution limits to candidates opposing candidates who spend large amounts of their own wealth on the campaign,¹ six candidates for election to Arizona's legislature filed a federal complaint in the District of Arizona's Phoenix courthouse, seeking to invalidate the matching funds provisions of the 1998 Arizona Clean Elections Act.²

In Davis v. FEC, the Supreme Court held that the Millionaire Amendment violated the First Amendment because it created negative consequences for spending a candidate's own money on campaign speech.³ Arizona's Clean Elections Act provided matching funds to candidates participating in public campaign financing when non-participating candidates' expenditures exceeded a statutory threshold.⁴

On August 26, five days after the complaint was filed, Judge Roslyn O. Silver ordered the plaintiffs to file their motion for a temporary restraining order by 5:00 p.m. that day and set hearing on the motion for two days later.⁵

At the August 28 hearing, Judge Silver's first question was why the case had been filed so recently.⁶ The plaintiffs responded that the statute had not applied to the first of them until July 25.⁷ On August 29, Judge Silver denied the temporary restraining order.⁸ Although the plaintiffs established a constitutional violation, Arizona has a “clear interest in running a smooth and orderly election” and “the length of time Plaintiffs waited to file their TRO also weighs in the balance against the Plaintiffs on the public interest determination.”⁹

After an October 9 hearing,¹⁰ Judge Silver denied the plaintiffs a preliminary injunction on October 14.¹¹ On October 17, Judge Silver explained that again “[p]laintiffs have shown a very strong likelihood of success on the merits. However, given the extraordinary balance of the harms required in the context of an ongoing election, Plaintiffs have not met their burden in showing that they are entitled to a preliminary injunction.”¹²

A serious difficulty with the plaintiffs’ case was the crafting of a suitable remedy.¹³ Would campaign contributions have to be returned? The plaintiffs did not propose to the court a plan for workable relief.¹⁴

After full litigation of the plaintiffs’ second amended complaint,¹⁵ Judge Silver declared, on January 20, 2010, that Arizona’s matching scheme for participating candidates opposing non-participating candidates was unconstitutional.¹⁶ The court of appeals reversed on May 21.¹⁷ The Supreme Court, however, agreed with Judge Silver, on June 27, 2011.¹⁸
