

Extending Voter Registration Deadlines Because of a Hurricane

In October 2016, federal judges in Florida and Georgia extended voter registration deadlines by one week because of Hurricane Matthew. A North Carolina state judge also extended voter registration in some counties.¹

“Nearly eight million Floridians, not counting tourists, sat in [Hurricane] Matthew’s potential path under hurricane or tropical storm warnings. A half-million were urged to evacuate their homes.”² So the Miami Herald reported on October 6, 2016.³ Two days later, the Herald reported, “More than a million statewide lost power.”⁴

On Sunday, October 9, the Florida Democratic Party filed a federal complaint in the Northern District of Florida against Florida’s governor and Florida’s secretary of state, seeking an extension of at least a week from the October 11 deadline for voter registration in light of the hurricane.⁵ With its complaint, the party filed a motion for a temporary restraining order.⁶

The court assigned the case to Judge Mark E. Walker, who learned he had it on Columbus Day, the day after the case was filed, when Judge Walker performed his customary morning docket check.⁷ He had intended to go into the office on the federal holiday anyway, but because of the filing he asked a law clerk to join him.⁸

Judge Walker included a temporary restraining order in a 16-page opinion issued on October 10 and posted to the docket from home by Judge Walker's courtroom deputy.⁹ Judge Walker found that the secretary of state was a proper defendant as Florida's chief election officer, but the governor was not, because although Florida law gave the governor the power to reschedule an election in case of emergency, it did not give him the power to extend the deadline for voter registration.¹⁰ Judge Walker extended the deadline for registration until 5:00 p.m. on October 12 and scheduled a preliminary injunction hearing for 10:00 a.m. on October 12.¹¹ Judge Walker concluded, "Quite simply, it is wholly irrational in this instance for Florida to refuse to extend the voter registration deadline when the state already allows the Governor to suspend or move the election date due to an unforeseen emergency."¹²

Judge Walker granted intervention motions on October 11 to (1) Mi Familia Vota Education Fund and the New Florida Majority¹³ and (2) a prospective citizen whose citizenship ceremony was postponed to October 15 because of the hurricane.¹⁴ Judge Walker was able to grant intervention motions quickly because his law clerk checked the docket for filings frequently during the emergency litigation.¹⁵

On October 12, Judge Walker consolidated the case with an October 11 action by the League of Women Voters to extend voter registration until October 18.¹⁶ The court originally assigned the case to Judge Robert L. Hinkle, who ordered it reassigned to Judge Walker as related to the Democratic Party's action.¹⁷

At the October 12 hearing, "Defendants took no position."¹⁸ Some parties appeared by telephone, and members of the news media were permitted to listen but not record the proceeding.¹⁹

A fan of Federal Rule of Evidence 614's provision for a judge calling and examining a witness, Judge Walker wanted testimony from a county supervisor of elections, and he had the clerk's office arrange for the local supervisor to appear.²⁰ The witness waived service of a subpoena.²¹

Leon County's supervisor of elections testified "that storms of this magnitude impose 'tremendous strain' on elections offices."²² With a three-page opinion, Judge Walker extended the voter registration deadline to October 18.²³ On October 13, Judge Walker ordered the parties to notify the court by October 14 "if they wish to seek further action in this case."²⁴

On October 18, the Democratic Party filed a motion to enforce the injunction, claiming that "[w]ithin days, Plaintiff began receiving reports that Florida state and local election officials have indicated that they are unlikely to complete the verification process for all voter registration applications before early voting begins in many counties on October 24."²⁵ The party sought a complete list of all registered voters, with weekly updates for registrations verified after October 23.²⁶ The secretary argued that the "baseless" motion "should be rejected out of hand."²⁷

Judge Walker granted motions by the Republican Party²⁸ and Florida's senate²⁹ to intervene in opposition to the Democratic Party's motion, and Judge Walker granted a motion to appear as an amicus curiae filed by the state's Association of Supervisors of Elections, which sought participation so that any remedy imposed by the court would be informed by the association's expertise.³⁰

At an October 20, hearing, Judge Walker received testimony from the supervisor of elections for Hillsborough County, the county that includes Tampa.³¹ Judge Walker wanted testimony from a witness with experience in one of Florida's four largest counties.³²

Judge Walker denied the enforcement motion.³³ Realizing the importance of monitoring orders as well as issuing them,³⁴ however, Judge Walker "asked [the defendant] to keep a running tally on the Florida Department of State website tabulating the number of pending voter-registration applications and the number of processed voter-registration applications."³⁵ Noting a slowdown in application processing and concluding that "almost 25,000 voters may or may not have their vote counted in the 2016 General Election," Judge Walker ordered Florida's secretary of state to present a witness on October 28 to testify at a telephonic hearing about Florida's ability to process voter registration applications.³⁶

Georgia's voter registration deadline was October 11 also.³⁷ Late at night on October 12, three organizations promoting voter registration filed a federal complaint against Georgia's governor and Georgia's secretary of state in the Southern District of Georgia's Savannah courthouse, seeking an extension of the voter registration deadline for residents of Chatham County, Georgia's seaside county on the South Carolina border that includes Savannah.³⁸ In their complaint, the plaintiffs observed, “Chatham County government offices, which opened today, were last open on Wednesday, October 5.”³⁹ With their complaint, the plaintiffs filed an emergency motion for a preliminary injunction.⁴⁰

On Thursday, October 13, Judge William T. Moore, Jr., the only district judge who sits in Savannah, set the case for hearing at 10:00 a.m. on the following day and ordered the clerk of court to serve defendants with copies of the case’s electronically filed papers.⁴¹ Judge Moore would have held the hearing on Thursday afternoon, but lawyers for both sides were in Atlanta, and the lawyers requested a Friday morning proceeding.⁴²

Following the October 14 hearing, Judge Moore extended the voter registration deadline in the county by one week.⁴³

While this Court harbors significant reservations concerning the ultimate merits of Plaintiffs’ claims, the Court concludes that Plaintiffs have established a sufficient likelihood of success to warrant injunctive relief. An individual’s ability to participate in local and national elections is arguably the most cherished right enshrined in our constitution. Indeed, our founding fathers felt so strongly about their right to participate in the electoral process that when deprived of it they took up arms against their sovereign, risking life and home for over eight years, to obtain that right.

In the final analysis, Defendants may not be under any obligation to provide Chatham County residents with an extension. Only time will tell. What is clear to the Court, however, is that granting the extension would have been the right thing to do.⁴⁴

On October 17, an organization and a prospective voter filed a federal complaint in the Southern District of Georgia’s Brunswick courthouse against the governor and the secretary of state seeking a reopening of voter registration statewide.⁴⁵ With their complaint, the plaintiffs filed a motion for a temporary restraining order.⁴⁶

teaching a seminar at the University of Georgia.⁴⁷ She asked Judge Moore if he would take the case.⁴⁸ On October 18, Judge Moore set the case for hearing on the following day.⁴⁹ The parties agreed to a Savannah hearing.⁵⁰

Following an October 19 hearing, Judge Moore denied relief in the second case, observing, “While all other counties were able to open their [Board of Elections] offices prior to the registration deadline, the Chatham County [Board of Elections] office did not reopen until October, 12, [the day after the original registration deadline].”⁵¹ Judge Moore accepted a voluntary dismissal of the second case on November 1⁵² and a stipulated dismissal of the first case on March 15, 2017.⁵³

Discussion in both cases highlighted hurricane difficulties in Georgia’s six coastal counties, but the evidence supported relief only for Chatham County in the first case and for no additional counties in the second case.⁵⁴ Litigation in both cases was stronger on argument than on evidence.⁵⁵
