

Ohio's Voter-Identification Law

Northeast Ohio Coalition for the Homeless v. Brunner (Gregory L. Frost and Algenon L. Marbley,
S.D. Ohio 2:06-cv-896)

Public-interest organizations challenged Ohio's 2006 voter-identification laws. At the hearing on a temporary restraining order, the parties informed the judge that the case was related to a case already pending before a different judge, to whom the second case was then reassigned. The second judge found the identification laws probably unconstitutional, but the court of appeals stayed his temporary restraining order. The court of appeals also reversed the judge's denial of the state's intervention as a party in addition to the state's secretary of state. In 2017, the district court determined that resolution of issues by statute and litigation obviated further need for a 2010 consent decree.

On October 24, 2006, public-interest organizations brought a federal constitutional challenge to Ohio's new voter-identification laws.¹ With the complaint, the plaintiffs filed a motion for a temporary restraining order.² The court assigned the case to Judge Gregory L. Frost, who held a teleconference with the parties that same day.³

Following customary practice when a plaintiff filed a motion for a temporary restraining order with a complaint, the clerk's office walked the complaint and motion to the assigned judge's chambers.⁴ The plaintiff was asked to remain present in the courthouse for a possibly immediate conference.⁵

At the first conference, Judge Frost set a hearing on the temporary-restraining-order motion for the next day.⁶ When the parties gathered for the hearing, they informed Judge Frost that the case was related to one before Judge Algenon L. Marbley.⁷

On the case's third day, it was reassigned to Judge Marbley.⁸ The earlier case arose from an August 31, 2006, complaint that in the 2004 general election Ohio's voting machines were distributed in an unequal and discriminatory manner to the disadvantage of urban and African American voters.⁹ As part of the relief sought in that case, the plaintiffs asked Judge Marbley to order Ohio's secretary of state to order each county to preserve 2004 ballots, but, on September 11, Judge Marbley issued an order directly to the counties that they do so.¹⁰ In 2012, Judge Marbley determined that the action was barred by the Eleventh Amendment.¹¹

On the day that he was assigned the second case, Judge Marbley convened a hearing at 3:00 p.m.¹² Scheduling for the second case was greatly facilitated by the overlap of attorneys working the two cases.¹³ The attorneys' considerable familiarity with the applicable areas of law was a great asset in moving the cases forward.¹⁴

At 5:10 p.m., the court recessed for forty-five minutes, and then Judge Marbley issued a temporary restraining order against the new voter-identification laws, finding a likelihood that the plaintiffs could prove some unconstitutionality, and ordered an evidentiary hearing on the morning of Wednesday, November 1.¹⁵

The State of Ohio sought to intervene on October 27 so that it could appeal the temporary restraining order.¹⁶ Judge Marbley denied the motion, reasoning that the state's interests were adequately represented by the defendant secretary of state.¹⁷

On October 31, the court of appeals, with one judge dissenting, stayed the temporary restraining order: "There is . . . a strong public interest in permitting legitimate statutory processes to operate to preclude voting by those who are not entitled to vote."¹⁸ The appellate court also determined that the state had a right to intervene.¹⁹

On the following day, six days before the election, Judge Marbley entered a consent order specifying how voters would have to prove their identities in Ohio for the 2006 election.²⁰ For the 2008 election, Judge Marbley also issued orders based on the parties' negotiations.²¹ In 2009, Judge Marbley awarded the plaintiffs $431,374.05 in attorney fees and costs.²²

This stay threatened to cause more disruption than it resolved. In particular, it threw into doubt what would happen to the absentee ballots that had been cast during the period that Judge Marbley's order was in effect, at which time voters could reasonably have believed that the ID requirements did not apply to them. Only the diligent efforts of Judge Marbley and the attorneys for both sides forestalled a potential post-election crisis.

approved a revision to the earlier award of fees and costs, increasing it to $504,414.11.²⁴ On November 30, Judge Marbley awarded an additional $18,943.13 in fees and costs.²⁵ Judge Marbley ruled on July 9, 2012, that Ohio's new executive administration was not entitled to relief from the decree.²⁶ The court of appeals affirmed Judge Marbley's decision on October 11.²⁷

On June 22, 2012, five labor organizations filed a federal complaint challenging some of Ohio's laws respecting provisional ballots, especially seeking a declaration that provisional ballots cast in the wrong precinct should be counted if they were cast in the wrong precinct because of poll-worker error.²⁸ The court determined that this case was related to Judge Marbley's pending action, and so it was assigned to him as well.²⁹

On August 27, Judge Marbley determined that provisional ballots cast in the wrong precinct because of poll-worker error must be counted.³⁰ In its October 11 affirmance, the court of appeals clarified that the voter must cast a provisional ballot at a correct location.³¹ On October 26, Judge Marbley found that the evidence supported an expansion of his injunction to protect provisional ballots cast in both the wrong location and the wrong precinct because of poll-worker error.³² Five days later, the court of appeals issued an emergency stay of the expanded injunction both because “last-minute injunctions changing election procedures are strongly disfavored”³³ and because, “Though voters must rely heavily on poll workers to direct them to the proper precinct in a multiprecinct voting place, they are not as dependent on poll workers to identify the correct polling place.”³⁴ On September 30, 2013, the court of appeals dismissed this appeal as moot because the 2012 election was well over.³⁵

On the Friday night before the 2012 general election, Ohio’s secretary of state issued a directive that election boards reject provisional ballots with incomplete identification information.³⁶ This violated the consent decree with respect to omissions resulting from poll-worker error for provisional voters who provided Social Security numbers as identification.³⁷ On November 13, four days before the counting of provisional ballots was to begin, Judge Marbley enjoined the violation of the consent decree and, as a matter of equal protection, ordered that provisional ballots for all voters be counted if incomplete identification information resulted from poll-worker error.³⁸ The court of appeals stayed the injunction pending appeal.³⁹ On February 6, 2014, the court of appeals remanded the case to Judge Marbley for vacation of his November 13, 2012, opinion, pursuant to an agreement of the parties approved by Judge Marbley.⁴⁰

On February 17, 2015, Judge Marbley awarded the plaintiffs $2,227,179.90 in fees and costs.⁴¹ The court of appeals largely affirmed the award on August 1, 2016, but remanded the fee requests for a reduction of

A supplemental complaint was filed on August 10, 2015.⁴⁴ Following twelve days of bench trial concluding on March 31, 2016, Judge Marbley declared on June 7 that some provisions of Ohio's 2014-enacted voting laws were in violation of the constitutional and Voting Rights Act rights of homeless and African American voters: rigid requirements for filling out voting forms, a proscription on poll-worker assistance, and a tight time frame for curing errors.⁴⁵ On September 13, 2016, the court of appeals affirmed the ruling on rigid requirements but, by a vote of two to one, reversed the rulings on poll-worker assistance and curing errors.⁴⁶ The dissenting senior judge voted to rehear the appeal, and six active judges, a minority, voted to rehear the appeal en banc.⁴⁷

Judge Marbley decided on April 28, 2017, that resolution of issues by statute and litigation had obviated further need for the 2010 consent decree.⁴⁸ On March 28, 2018, Judge Marbley issued a stipulated award of $1,100,000 in attorney fees and costs.⁴⁹
